NATHAN FELLOWES DUPUIS

His experiments always worked, he was a superb expositor, more than anyone else he was responsible for the founding of the School of Mining

by NORMAN MILLER

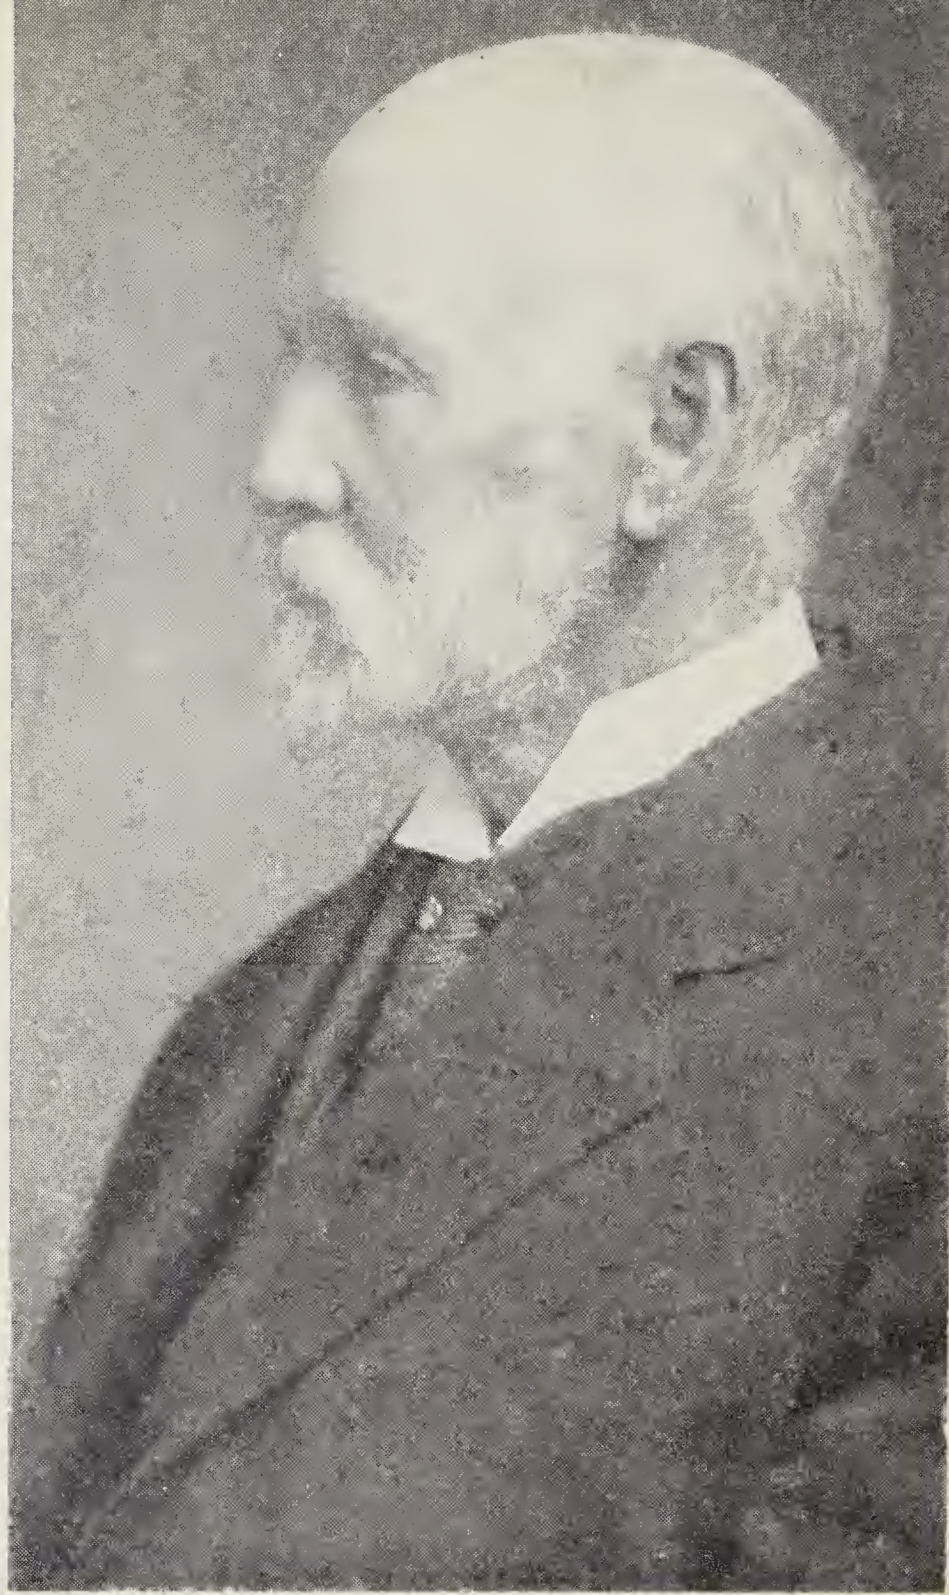

THE charter of Queen's University was signed by Queen Victoria on October 16, 1841. The motivation for its founding was provided by the Presbyterian Church in Scotland and its daughter church in Canada. Inevitably it was modelled upon the Scottish universities and, particularly, upon that of Edinburgh. For the first twenty-four years, practically all of the staff were recruited from Scotland or from the Presbyterian Church in Canada, whose ministers were themselves immigrants from Scotland. When early graduates of the new college had made their mark, some were taken on the staff, along with recruits from the old land. Two men of the first graduating class (1847) had subsequent long careers in the service of their Alma Mater — J. B. Mowat on the teaching staff and George Bell as registrar. In the decade of the 1860's the staff was enriched by the addition of two other graduates whose devotion to learning and to Queen's was life long. They were J. H. MacKerras in classics and N. F. Dupuis in science and mathematics. The dedication of the building for Chemical Engineering, Dupuis Hall, provides the occasion for an estimate of the life and work of one of our most distinguished pioneers.

A book entitled "Representative Canadians," published in 1886, contains an account of the forbears of Nathan Fellowes Dupuis. As very few copies of this book survive, it may be a service to history to quote the relevant paragraph: "His father was Joseph Dupuis, who was born in the county of Maskinonge, Province of Quebec, being a descendant of an old Dupuis family, which was amongst the first settlers of Lower Canada. M. Dupuis, Sr., enlisted in the Canadian Militia when a young man, and was in the battle of Chrysler's Farm; came thence to Kingston, where he was discharged and received his scrip for land. Nathan Dupuis' mother was Eleanor, a daughter of James Baker, who was born at Tarrytown, New York State, in 1767, and left there with his father, Samuel, on the breaking out of the revolution. After suffering much hardship, the family reached Nova Scotia, being known as U.E. Loyalists. The son entered the British army and served seventeen years, some time in Jamaica, but chiefly in the maritime provinces and in Newfoundland. He married, and his only child Eleanor was born in Halifax, February 25, 1799. He afterwards moved to Kingston, where Eleanor Baker married Joseph Dupuis. Joseph Dupuis and his wife lived for some time in Kingston, then settled in Ernestown, where two sons were born to them, and afterwards bought a farm in the township of Portland, Frontenac county, where two other sons were born. Joseph Dupuis' family consisted of four sons, the eldest of which, James, is a farmer, the second is Dr. Thomas R. Dupuis, the third is Professor Nathan F. Dupuis and the fourth is dead." The fourth son was Joseph Dupuis (1839-1860).

Nathan Dupuis was born on April 13, 1836, on his father's farm. The country schools, during his boyhood, varied from good to bad and one suspects that there were more of the latter than of the former. Egerton Ryerson had yet to make his impression on the education system of Ontario. For a boy of Nathan's ability and determination the character of the school was irrelevant; he was largely self-educated. An illustration of this is furnished by his tribute, in an address given in 1901, to another self-educated scholar, James Ferguson. Ferguson is described as a Scottish astronomer, painter, mechanic and public lecturer of the eighteenth century. His book on astronomy fell into Dupuis' hands when he was at an impressionable age. As an incentive to ambitious youth, his tribute to Ferguson will bear quoting.

"Whatever he may be or may have been to others, he is my hero. For in my boyhood days he came into my life as an inspiration; and the subject matter and the figures and illustrations of his charming book on astronomy, over which I pored so fervently in my early teens, will remain in my memory as long as life lasts. He was one of those great souls who satisfy Burns' aspiration when he sings —

Gie me a spark of Nature's fire,
It's all the learning I desire.

For he who has such a spark within him will not remain in ignorance though he never approach within a hundred miles of a college. For everything he hears and sees, and every experience that comes to him, whether good or bad, will continually pour their lessons into his receptive mind, and with Shakespeare he will

See tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones and good in everything."

In Dupuis' boyhood his mechanical aptitude, which was so marked a characteristic of his whole life, early asserted itself. At about thirteen years of age he achieved a neighborhood reputation by making a clock which was kept in the barn and was keeping time. This information having reached the ears of William Smith, a Kingston clockmaker, he visited the farm and ended by inviting the young Dupuis to join him as an apprentice. Incidentally his business is still carried on in Kingston under the name Smith. For four years, from age fourteen to eighteen, Dupuis practised clockmaking. He left this employment when, according to one report, his health required it.

Having by now a keen interest in education, Dupuis prepared for teaching and from age twenty-one to twenty-seven he taught public school. His ambition then requiring a wider field, in 1863 he enrolled in Queen's University from which he graduated B.A. in 1866. His maturity, combined with his ability and his mechanical aptitude and training, made him a marked student even as an undergraduate. He was appointed observer in Prof. Williamson's primitive observatory in 1863 and librarian in 1866. In 1868 he received the M.A. degree and was appointed to the chair of chemistry, succeeding Robert Bell who in turn had succeeded George Lawson. Before Lawson's advent at Queen's, chemistry as well as most other natural sciences had rested on the broad shoulders of James Williamson. He it was who, on the founding of the Faculty of Medicine in 1854, added to his load its department of chemistry until the arrival of Lawson four years later.

Although Dupuis' official connection for thirteen years was with chemistry his teaching ranged more widely. As occasion demanded he taught physics, geology, mineralogy and biology. His earliest publication, Geometrical Optics (1868), a careful and methodical exposition of the subject, testifies to his interest in physical science.

The lack of laboratory facilities called forth all of Dupuis' ingenuity in illustrating his lectures. His regret, as well as his persistence, are reflected in his address of 1901. He says "The first year of my incumbency, and the most weary session I ever put in at Queen's, was very largely lost in lecturing on chemistry without any means of putting life into the lectures by experimentation How could any man, whatever his powers, be successful in teaching an experimental subject under such conditions, for the first chemical laboratory of Queen's came into existence only two years before I ceased to teach the subject. But the ingenuity with which nature endowed me, and a mechanically trained hand and eye, were of singular advantage to me; and more than one piece of apparatus, which under the stress of necessity I constructed in those days, is still serving a purpose in the science department, and bids fair to outlast its maker."

The Faculty of Medicine was set up in 1854 and the Old Medical Building was erected for its accommodation in 1858, at a cost, incidentally, of $10,000. For many years it had a precarious existence, aggravated by dissensions among staff and trustees. As a result the Medical School severed its connection with Queen's in 1866 and was dispossessed of its building in 1870. It then carried on for ten years in rented quarters under the pretentious name of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons. Its home for one year was in the original building of what is now known as Rideaucrest. From there it moved to a stone building on Lower Princess Street, which had been the head office of the Commercial bank, whose failure in 1867 had precipitated the gravest financial crisis in the university's history. On Principal Grant's initiative the college was brought back to the campus and to its original building in 1880. It was not until 1892 that the Royal College was again admitted into the University fold and became once more the Faculty of Medicine. It had a sojourn of twenty-six years in the wilderness. During these years it was saved from extinction only by the efforts of some devoted and determined men. One of the chief of these was Nathan Dupuis who, twenty-nine years later, recalled the first year of the Royal College away from the campus:

"For all of us, but for me in particular, that was a season of especially hard work. For after completing my day's work at the University, I had to walk two miles through sun and storm, fair weather or foul, for five evenings in the week, carry in my hands such means of illustration as I could, lecture an hour, and then walk two miles to my home again. It required some courage to stick to a cause which appeared to be so near a collapse, but we determined, one and all, to work for it."

In 1880 when Williamson had borne the burden and the heat of the day for thirty-eight years, it was realized both by him and by the Queen's trustees that a wider distribution of teaching duties was called for. Dupuis, whose many-sided abilities were generously acknowledged by his predecessor, was asked to assume the chair of mathematics. He rose to this challenge and entered upon what proved to be the main effort of his life. "Having made the change" he said later "I did not come into a very goodly heritage, for mathematics from the modern point of view was at a very low ebb in the college."

There is no doubt of the truth of the statement last quoted. Lest it be supposed, however, that Dupuis held a low opinion of his former teacher Williamson, the following quotation from an address that he gave at an anniversary of the medical school will set the record straight: "Although somewhat absent-minded and at times making laughable mistakes, he (Williamson) was nevertheless a man of extensive erudition, beloved by everyone who knew him, and one of the dearest personalities in the world. Among his other labours, which were many, he entered heartily into the inception of the new Medical College and for a number of years found time to take charge of its Chemical Department."

Although Dupuis took over the department of mathematics in 1880, it was not until 1883 that he was able to divest himself of responsibility for chemistry. In that year W. L. Goodwin was appointed to the chair of chemistry and D. H. Marshall to that of physics.

Dupuis lost no time in recasting the program in mathematics and building an honours course. His revised course would compare favourably with that of any other college in the country. He wrote a number of text books. Besides Geometrical Optics, these included Plane Geometry (1889), which was widely used, Solid Geometry (1893), Algebra (1893), Astronomy (1902), Spherical Trigonometry (1910) and The Measurement of Time (1911). This last was a compilation of articles that had appeared in the Queen's Quarterly. These books served their day and generation. That day is, of course, now past.

The increasing prestige of the honours course in mathematics is attested by the number and quality of its graduates, who found ready entrance to American graduate schools. To proceed not later than the turn of the century, some names come to mind of graduates in mathematics who went on to notable careers. These, with brief notations of their subsequent careers, include J. C. Connell (long dean of the Faculty of Medicine), Arpad Govan (a minister in eastern Ontario), Francis King (Queen's solicitor, etc.), J. Findlay (McMaster), W. J. Patterson (Western), R. S. Minnes (Ottawa physician), N. R. Carmichael (Queen's Dept. of Physics), J. A. Stewart (Renfrew industrialist), Etta Reid (Mrs. Newlands), C. R. MacInnes (Princeton), E. R. Peacock (London financier), T. A. Kirkconnell (high school headmaster), S. A. Mitchell (astronomer, Columbia and Virginia), I. T. Norris (Ottawa C.I. Mathematics master), J. Matheson (Queen's), L. A. H. Warren (Manitoba). It remains to add that most of these and other graduates held Dupuis in high esteem amounting almost to veneration. Mrs. Newlands, for example, who assisted Dupuis immediately after her graduation in 1892 and, later during several years of her widowhood served as instructor, was a hero worshipper and her hero was Dupuis.

Mention has been made of Dupuis' role in the preservation and nurture of the Faculty of Medicine. A cause even closer to his heart was the teaching and use of Applied Science. A lecture that he gave in 1872 is devoted entirely to this subject. If this kind of special pleading for science were to occur today one would say that the author of it was beating a dead horse; no one questions the importance of science today. It was not so in the 1870's. Queen's inherited a strong classical tradition from Scotland and for many years science, especially technology, was regarded by some members of the faculty as an interloper in Academe. Dupuis, on the other hand, lost no opportunity to stress the importance, indeed the necessity as he saw it, of introducing applied science in the university and he, more than anyone else, was responsible for the founding of the School of Mining, which developed into the Faculty of Applied Science. This was inaugurated in 1894 and Dupuis was its dean from '94 until his retirement in 1911.

Enough time has now elapsed since Dupuis' death for us to attempt a dispassionate estimate of him as a scientist and as a teacher. First, as a scientist. For a man who was largely self-educated and who taught a large spectrum of sciences, it is hardly to be expected that he would be at the top level in any one. A competent craftsman in many lines he certainly was, astronomy being one of his strong interests. In mathematics, which for thirty-one years was his main field, his interest was greatest in geometry which he approached from an intuitive point of view. To the postulational method, treated by Hilbert, Veblen and others, he did not respond. On receiving a complimentary copy of Veblen and Young's Geometry he glanced over it and then gave it to Matheson with the comment that it did not interest him. He seems never to have taught a course in Complex Variable theory though he was quite content to have Matheson do so. On the other hand it is an indication of the practical bent of his mind that he took readily to Hamilton's Quaternions and included a half course on it in his honours program.

..... I have seen him rise, a quiet little figure, during an unexpected discussion—near the end of it, he was never very forward in speaking unless it fell to him as a duty—when opinions were still a little confused and finding themselves, so to speak, and deliver in clear and simple terms the reasons, always relevant, always weighty, which determined his judgement at least. If he was not perfectly clear about the matter he sat silent with much equanimity. He had none of the weakness which makes a man speak for the sake of speaking, not even when others might expect him to do so. I do not remember ever having seen him attempting, as other senior members would occasionally, to balance and conciliate conflicting opinions in a perturbed debate with the view of concluding in some judicious and politic compromise. That was not his line, nor had he the psychological subtlety for such work. He might at times hesitate between two different courses, but it was not usually apparent; if he did, the pros and cons of both were very clear to him; there was little penumbra or vaporous floating margin of intuitions and presentiments in his mind. I have often heard Principal Grant, who was a man of inspirations, say: "I feel it in my bones," or "it is in the back of my head," but Dupuis never.

—JAMES CAPPON
Queen's Quarterly

His presidential address to section III of the Royal Society of Canada in 1897 is, to modern ears, a rather pathetic argument against the modern geometries — non Euclidean and higher dimensional. So Dupuis was not a modern mathematician. How could he be? The situation at Queen's in his day did not call for a mathematician engaged in modern research. No one of that quality would have faced the enormous amount of work involved just in keeping the institution alive and building it up.

Turning to Dupuis as a teacher, we find a different situation. Whereas, by report, Williamson's experiments seldom worked, Dupuis' experiments always worked. He made many models, mostly in wood, to illustrate solid geometry, astronomy, and other subjects. Among these were two diffraction gratings made by ruling very fine lines on glass to produce a spectrum when held in sunlight. His most intricate models were clocks and orreries most of which have disappeared or are now beyond repair. The clock in Grant Hall tower was designed by him and made by his students in the Mechanical Laboratory. Of all his apparatus the most phenomenal is described by Matheson as follows: " . . . a clock which is unique. Its mechanism runs nine dials, one for mean time, one for sidereal time, one for the day of the month, one for the positions of the planets in the ecliptic, one for certain information about the positions of the moon, and four for positions of the sun." The mathematical models that remain have been collected, some of them repaired and others, too fragile after eighty years' use, replaced. They are now in a cabinet and are known as the Dupuis collection.

In his classroom teaching Dupuis was equally successful. In his prime he seems to have been a superb expositor. An example, albeit an extreme one, of the eulogies to him was the following, made at the time of his death by W. L. Grant, son of Principal G. M. Grant and himself a prominent educator: "He was the only perfect teacher I have ever known and I have studied under John Watson and Edward Caird."

Those of us who attended Dupuis' classes in his last years at Queen's would probably not speak in such superlative terms. His lectures, which had been composed with great diligence and labour were committed to notes which were used without change thereafter. A set of notes taken by a student in 1892 would have served very well for his son in 1910. So the lectures became somewhat lacking in spontaneity and the challenge of fresh problems. It may have been different in the 1880's.

Dupuis' interest in education at the primary and secondary level, dating from his six years of public school teaching, persisted throughout his life. He served for four years as inspector of schools in Kingston. When an Association of Teachers was formed in the city Dupuis was elected as its first president. His address on this occasion (1877), taking issue with some official practices, still has interest to educators.

Among the honours received in his lifetime by Dupuis were honorary degrees from Queen's and McGill and a charter fellowship in the Royal Society of Canada. During the interregnum between the regimes of principals Grant and Gordon, he acted as principal. His portrait, commissioned by his students and former students and painted by Robert Harris, now adorns Dupuis Hall. A convocation in 1901, at which this portrait was presented, was the occasion for an address from which excerpts have been quoted in the preceding pages. After his retirement his graduates endowed three Dupuis scholarships one for each of the faculties of Arts, Applied Science, and Medicine.

In physical recreation other than working with tools at his work bench, Dupuis did not indulge. He played the violin and was no mean artist in oils and water colours. Here his work was characterized by careful and meticulous drawing, at the opposite pole from the modern cult of abstractionism.

Nathan Dupuis was twice married. His first marriage, in 1860, was to Amelia Ann McGinnis. Besides a child who died in infancy, their children were: James McGinnis (1861-1895); Helen Heloise (1864-1941); Eugene Leon (1866-1933). Of these, James left no issue. Eugene practised medicine in the United States where his family trail has been lost. Heloise married the Rev. Melvin Tayler, a widower with two children. Her stepdaughter, Alice Tayler, later Mrs. Ashley Lindsay, has furnished some intimate details concerning Professor Dupuis, with whom, as his "granddaughter," she was on the most affectionate terms. Two years after Amelia Dupuis' death in 1904, Nathan Dupuis married Mae Gordon Thompson, who survived him for twenty-six years, until her death in 1943.

The Dupuis family lived for some years in one of the wings of Summerhill. He then planned and had built the double house one part of which, 144 University Ave., was occupied by them and after his death by his widow for the remainder of her life. One of the unfortunate by-products of the growth of the university was the demolition of this house. In his will Professor Dupuis left his house and estate remaining after his wife's death to the university for the endowment of a chair in mathematics. He died in California on July 20, 1917.

Queen's has now, happily, survived its pioneer stage. It is well, however, to remind present and future generations of staff and students of the pioneers who made this survival possible. "Let us now praise famous men" admonished an ancient ecclesiastic. By giving the name Dupuis to a splendid building we follow this injunction as well as discharge an obligation to an illustrious pioneer.

Alumni Contribute $963,316

Of this amount $167,668 came from the Alumni Fund, $742,603 from bequests, $52,295 from Capital Appeal - Friends of Queen's gave $37,000

● Contributions to the Alumni Fund in 1968 amounted to $167,668, from 5,648 donors, as compared with $169,182 from 5,613 the preceding year.

Total alumni contributions to the University in 1968 came to $963,316; Alumni Fund, $167,668; bequests, $742,603; alumni organizations, $750; Capital Appeal, $52,295. Alumni givings to the Capital Appeal now total $543,267. Total alumni contributions to the University in 1967 were $349,888.

There were 339 alumni who contributed to the Fund for the first time, in the amount of $3,911. Two hundred and ninety graduates increased their givings over the previous year.

Of the $167,271, the sum of $37,464 was received through Friends of Queen's, Inc. In addition, $7,000 was also given to Queen's by two corporations in the U.S. Incidentally the president of Friends of Queen's now is Dr. E. C. A. Crawford, of Ossining, N.Y., and the mail address for Friends of Queen's is

Box 901, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y., 10019.

The corporate alumnus program produced $2,491. This is the plan under which many companies in Canada and the United States match the contributions made by their employees.

Four-fifths of the contributions to the Fund, $132,574, were not allocated to any specific project, with disposition being left to the judgment of the Board of Trustees of the University. Among the funds that were earmarked for a specific purpose were: Boyd Drug Research, alumni bursaries, W. H. MacInnes Fund, Canadiana General Reference Books, Medical Faculty, Dr. P. M. Macdonnell Bursary, Marion Ross Bursary, R. M. Baltzen Scholarship, Science Dean's Fund, School of Business, women's residences, men's residences, building fund, as well as many others.

The average contribution was $29.69, and the participation was 28. The contributions were distributed as follows:

2,822	gave $	1 to $	10 —	$21,176
1,816	gave	11 to	25 —	36,914
600	gave	26 to	50 —	26,171

AROUND THE CAMPUS

Dr. J. R. Wilson appointed chairman of the Centre for Metal and Mineral Technology—Faculty of Medicine plays major role in Kingston's first kidney transplant—Hon. L. B. Pearson first Brockington Visitor on campus

Heads Technology Centre

Dr. J. R. Wilson, associate professor, Department of Metallurgical Engineering, has been appointed chairman of the Centre for Metal and Mineral Technology. The Centre will be an interdisciplinary, interdepartmental research group of faculty members with common interests and will perform research primarily in the field of the science and technology of metal resources. Initially, because of space restrictions, the research emphasis will be scientific rather than technological, but it is hoped that as soon as additional accommodation for the Centre becomes available the research program will expand into more engineering-oriented research programs.

Currently the Centre has thirteen research projects under way in the chemical metallurgical area, and an additional sixteen projects planned in related study areas. Present research projects are financed by grants of about $125,000 and, at the end of the first five-year period, it is expected that the annual budget will amount to $500,000.

A ten-man advisory board has been formed with members from research organizations, government, and industry. This board will advise on long-term research programs, the Centre's liaison and relationships with industrial and governmental research groups and the relevance of programs to Canadian needs and interests.

The stated objectives of the Centre are to improve the calibre of the program in graduate research and instruction and to attract graduate students, professional scientists and faculty of great ability and high motivations.

First Brockington Visitor

Lester B. Pearson, former Prime Minister of Canada, was on the Queen's campus January 20 to 30 as the first Brockington Visitor, and participated in a crowded schedule of seminars, panel discussions, lectures, and informal meetings with students and faculty.

The Brockington Visitorship was established in honour of Dr. Leonard W. Brockington, who served as Rector of Queen's from 1947 until his death in 1966. It was made possible through the generosity of Col. R. S. McLaughlin of Oshawa, Ont., a friend of Dr. Brockington's and a long-time benefactor of Queen's.

Members of the Brockington Visitor Committee were: Dr. W. G. Breck, the Rev. Dr. A. M. Laverty, Prof. J. A. Lovink, Brian M. Rogers, and David Ward.

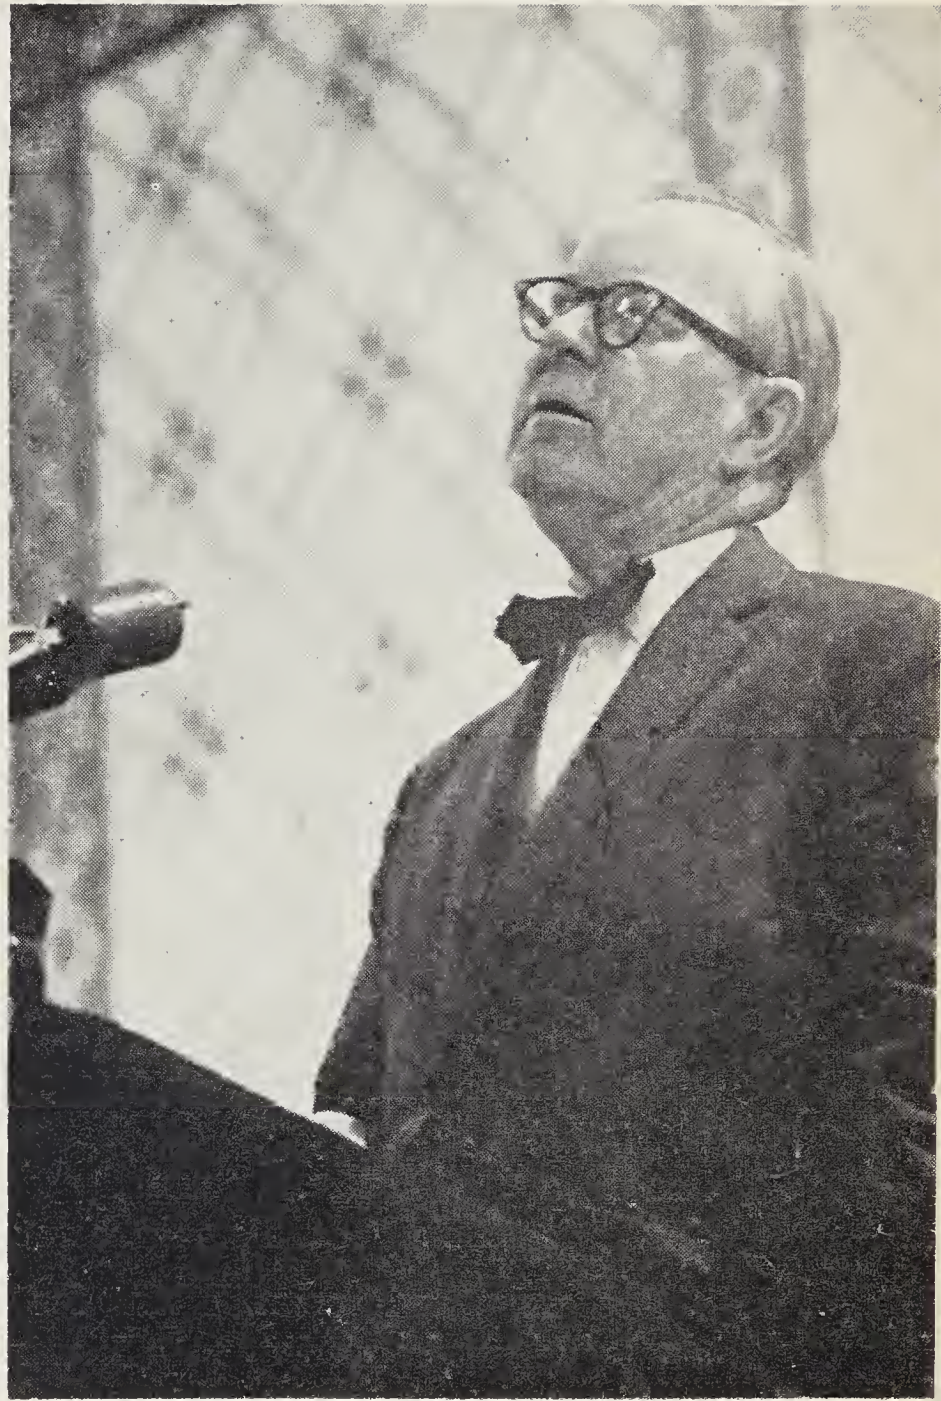

Transplant Performed

The Faculty of Medicine played a major role in Kingston's first kidney transplant operation performed recently.

The transplant came less than a month after the announcement that a 100-member team made up of Queen's University, Kingston General Hospital, and Hotel Dieu Hospital medical personnel was standing by to undertake the area's first human organ transplant.

The first beneficiary of the transplant was a Kingston housewife and mother of three who had been kept alive by the renal dialysis unit in the K.G.H.'s Douglas Wing since losing both her diseased kidneys in an operation about a year before. She received the right kidney of an automobile accident victim.

Approximately 2,000 of these operations have been performed throughout the world since the first successful kidney transplant ten years ago. Kingston is the first city of its size to attempt the transplant and the undertaking was made possible because of the facilities and personnel afforded by the University and its affiliated teaching hospitals.

OLD BOYS WIN

The Hockey Old Boys returned to the ice before Christmas to try conclusions with the current crop of Golden Gaels and, for the second year in a row, skated off with a victory, this time by 8-5.

Scoring for the Old Boys were Bob Carnegie (2), Billy Colvin (2), Tic Langlois, Doug Major (2), Ron Kinney.

Senate Meetings Now Open

Future meetings of the University Senate will be open to fifty spectators — thirty-five students, ten members of faculty, and five representatives of the press. In addition, the Senate has agreed that each committee of the Senate should decide whether its meetings should be open.

Another important decision is to provide for student representation on all committees, and to increase student representation from ten to twenty.

The Senate's action on "openness" and student representation were based on recommendations made by its Operations Review Committee, following a request from the Alma Mater Society, student-governing body. The decision was reached only after a thorough discussion in which all members of the Senate participated.

Catalogue Published

A catalogue of the permanent collection of paintings, sculpture, and drawings of the Agnes Etherington Art Centre has been published. Designed by the late Carl Dair, a typographical designer of international stature, the catalogue contains biographical notes on the artists, and descriptions of the works housed at the Centre. Included are 300 illustrations, eight of them in colour.

Research and compilation for the catalogue was carried out by Frances K. Smith, assistant to the director of the Centre. The catalogue honours the donor of the Centre, Agnes Etherington, its first director, Andre Bieler, and the many alumni, including Samuel Zacks, E. C. Gill, and Dr. Alfred Bader, whose contributions represent a large part of the Centre's collection.

STUDENTS GIVE BLOOD

Queen's students gave 888 pints of blood in a three-day drive in January in the last of their two annual blood drives.

At the first drive held last October 935 pints were donated. In each of the sixteen drives since 1959 between 485 and 1,071 pints have been given.

Campus Planner Is Appointed

Prof. Graham Andrews of the Department of Civil Engineering, has been appointed University campus planner. The move is expected to improve the University's capacity to deal with common City-University problems and to integrate better academic and physical planning. Professor Andrews, a professional planner, will continue to satisfy his academic interests through a part-time appointment as an assistant professor.

An important function of the campus planner will be to provide liaison on matters of physical growth at the University . . . the Board of Trustees, the Senate, the committees on academic and campus planning, department of physical plant, the City, government bodies, and the office of academic planning.

Gerald R. McCahill of the Department of Physical Plant will assist Professor Andrews and assume the title of project planning and development engineer. Mr. McCahill and his staff will be responsible for specific projects and their development within the terms of approved planning policy.

The Directors of the Alumni Association presented Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Corry with several pieces of Lalique glass as a token of appreciation for all that the former Principal and his wife had done for the University in general and the alumni in particular. former Baker House, will be known as Jeffery Hall after Dr. R. L. Jeffery who was head of the Department of Mathematics from 1943 to 1960. Dr. Jeffery is a mathematician of international reputation and has published many important research papers.

Buildings Named

Names have been approved for two new academic buildings at Queen's.

The new psychology building on Arch Street, on the site formerly occupied by the Jock Harty Arena, has been named Humphrey Hall after Dr. George Humphrey, head of the Queen's Department of Philosophy from 1924 until 1947 when he left to establish a psychology department at Oxford. Dr. Humphrey was a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada, and a graduate of Oxford, London, Leipzig and Harvard. He died in 1966.

The new mathematics building on University Avenue, on the site of the

New Residence

A new residence scheduled for completion on the west campus by September, 1970, will house seventy-six more students than originally planned — 576 rather than 500.

The residence will eventually house McArthur College students only, but during the first years will take students from the University at large. McArthur College is the name of Queen's new Faculty of Education. The west campus is situated one mile west of the regular campus.

Some of the members of Science '44 Co-op cavort in the snow in front of the main unit.

Four students enjoy a relaxing half-hour in the living room of one of the houses on Sydenham St. Informality is the key note, and the members form a closely knit community.

SCIENCE '44 CO-OP

New co-operative rises phoenix-like from ashes of the old—students buy seven houses which provide board and lodgings for seventy undergraduates, and are planning two more units of seven—offers alternative to residences

REMEMBER the old Science '44 Co-op, with properties on Earl St., University Ave., and Albert St.? There is now a new Co-op which is rapidly expanding to fill a need for student housing. The new organization took over the charter of Science '44 Co-operative which folded last year.

A section of the dining room in the main house on Earl St., where all the seventy students, members of the first unit, eat.

With the revenue from the sale of Collins House, and a loan from the Alma Mater Society as equity, the new Co-op got a mortgage from Central Mortgage and Housing and bought seven houses in Sydenham Ward — two on Bagot St., two on Sydenham St., and three on Earl St.

The new Co-op was organized because it was felt by some of the students that existing types of accommodation did not offer a wide enough choice in ways to live. The Co-op is set up on a co-ed basis, with men and women in the same house. There is a central dining room in the Earl St. houses which will accommodate the seventy people in the group.

The big attraction for the members is the fact that the average cost of room and board is $650 for the year, as opposed to fees which range up to several hundred dollars more in the University residences.

Meals are served six days a week. A cook has been hired to do the cooking, but all members must take a turn at kitchen duty, which amounts to about two hours or more per person.

The men and women have their own bathrooms on each floor. Every house unit has its own kitchen and common-room area, which tends to make each house a cohesive social unit.

The Co-op was developed to offer an alternative to residence living, which is regarded by some students as sterile and uninteresting. The Co-op is able to organize various activities and events not possible in a residence. Professors and special guests are often invited to dinner, and, of course, there are always Co-op parties.

Students in charge of the Co-op regard this year's venture as highly successful. They are in the process of expanding to two more divisions, each with its own kitchen and dining-room facilities. There will be a total of 220 individuals in the three divisions.

Each division will be as decentralized and autonomous as possible, each with its own cook. There will be a central Board of Directors to maintain some supervision among the units.

One reason for expansion is that the Co-op can employ a full-time general manager, to provide continuity from one year to another. At present this is the responsibility of a student, and it is really too onerous for one person who can only work part-time.

But expansion costs money, the student management points out. Contingent upon the approval of the University's Board of Trustees, the Alma Mater Society has agreed to lend the Co-op board up to $70,000 toward the necessary equity. The Co-op will be able to get the same terms from Central Mortgage and Housing on a long-term mortgage if the 10 per cent equity can be raised. If any Queen's graduates or Science '44 want to participate in this experiment in student housing and to ensure that Science '44 survives, they are invited to send in contributions: The Treasurer, Science '44 Co-operative Inc., 128 Earl St. Kingston, Ont.; or the contributions may be made to the Alumni Fund, earmarked for the use of Science '44 Co-op.

Members line up cafeteria style for their meal, and take turns behind the counter.

One of the co-ed rooms Co-op—this is on the third floor of the Earl Street unit.

Dr. C. D. Nelson

One of the brightest and best persons ever to graduate from Queen's died of leukemia on June 22, 1968: Charles Donald Nelson, B.A., M.A., Ph.D. (Queen's), and Ph. D. (Pennsylvania), had accomplished so much that he was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada, one of the youngest ever to be so honoured. He was only forty when he died but his achievements were great. He had published more than fifty papers, had been on the staff of the National Research Council, as well as at Queen's and Simon Fraser University.

He joined the latter when it was being organized and was its first Dean of Science. He recruited an excellent staff and started procedures and the use of devices which markedly improved teaching and research. He was head of Biological Services at S.F.U. at the time of his death. There has been no trouble there at all among the staff and students in the natural sciences and part of the credit for that certainly due to Dr. Nelson.

The research in which he was engaged was very complex but of vast importance. All of the energy which man uses as food and fuel, besides materials such as wood, paper, and many chemicals, came from the sun as transformed by green plants. The needs are increasing rapidly and, of course, fossil fuels (coal, oil, gas) made of green plants long ago are wasting assets. If man could solve the problem of transforming solar energy directly instead of depending on green plants, this would be of enormous benefit. Dr. Nelson began this study and continued it under the stimulating influence of the late Dr. Krotkov, and their work should surely lead to success.

While feeling sorrow at his untimely death all should appreciate his accomplishments.

Doubtless they do and the wry statement of a citizen of Deep River, Ont., should be interpreted in this light. The people of Deep River, he said, have a grudge against Don Nelson because he married and took away the finest teacher they ever had.

To his widow, Frances McEwen Nelson, and their four, fine children deep sympathy is extended, together with encouragement to live up to the greatness of the deceased.

This fascinating, easy-to-read brochure explains the difference between concrete and cement, terms which are often used incorrectly. It tells the story of how the cement industry in Canada began. It tells how and where "Canada" cement is made today across the country. And it explains what is meant by such terms as "reinforced concrete", "prestressed concrete", "precast concrete" and describes many applications of concrete and uses for cement in modern construction. A valuable addition to your reference file, "The Canada Cement Story" is available free in English or French.

Appointed Dean of the Faculty of Law

DANIEL A. SOBERMAN

PROFESSOR Daniel A. Soberman has been appointed Dean of the Faculty of Law, effective December 1, 1968. Professor Soberman has been Acting Dean since the resignation of Dean W. R. Lederman. Dean Lederman relinquished his post last August in order to devote full time to research and teaching as a member of the Faculty of Law.

He has been a member of the Law Faculty since the opening of the Law School in 1957. In 1967 he was appointed Associate Dean, and only recently became the Acting Dean of the Faculty.

A native of Toronto, Ont., Professor Soberman is a graduate in Arts and Law from Dalhousie University, and also holds a Master of Arts degree from Harvard. His area of specialization includes contracts, corporation law, and problems of federalism.

Before joining the faculty of Queen's, he had practised law in Toronto and had taught Law for two years at Dalhousie. He is a member of the bars of Ontario and Nova Scotia.

At Queen's he has been active in assisting foreign students through the Internal House organization, and active in the World University Service. He is the co-author, with J. E. Smyth, of a widely used text on commercial law entitled The Law and Business Administration in Canada.

UNIVERSITY GOVERNMENT

Throughout the course of its history Queen's has been reshaping its own structures — two new documents mark another stage in the successful evolution of Queen's as it meets the changing needs of the time.

Committee chairmen:

Dr. J. A. Corry and Prof. F. W. Gibson

TWO documents which will play an important role in the history of the University have been issued in booklet form.

The first document is the report of Dr. J. A. Corry's Committee on University Government, which reached unanimous conclusions, since been approved, in principle, by the Board of Trustees. The second paper deals with the structures and procedures of the Senate and has been the basis of a major reform of that body and the widening of its membership to include representatives of the student body. It was prepared by a Committee under the Chairmanship of Vice-Principal F. W. Gibson and has been approved by the Senate and endorsed by Dr. Corry's Committee and by the Board of Trustees.

In a foreword to the booklet Dr. J. J. Deutsch has written: "Throughout the course of its history Queen's has been reshaping its own structures and procedures. The two documents included herein mark another stage in the successful evolution of Queen's as it meets changing needs of the time."

The report of the joint committee on university government dealt with changes in the nature of Canadian society including the marked shifts in the ways in which people earn their living and in the types of communities in which they live; marked alterations in the functions and relative importance of the various groupings of society — industrial, occupational, and cultural; the shift in preparing the young to live in society with the family and church less influential than they used to be; by the high birth rate, by the impressive rise in the standard of living, and by the attempt to provide larger numbers of persons with advanced education and highly specialized training for occupations that proliferate with the advance in technology.

Consequently, teachers at all levels in the educational system have acquired a more important role and have improved their position in the economic scale. However, the higher status of teachers is not due only to the increasing emphasis society has been prepared to place on the education of the young. Within the last decade mostly, many faculty members have found a growing need for their knowledge and their skills. The more complex the society becomes, the greater the need.

As change quickens and cuts deeper, nearly all studies conducted at universities are relevant to what goes on in the world outside. The university academic community has become an increasingly important group in society.

The importance of the university teacher to society is nothing new. It is the widespread recognition of this fact that is new. The outside world that used to take him for granted as a feature of the landscape now awaits the results of his work on many important subjects. In fact, he has a significant part in shaping the outside world. Naturally, he comes to want a larger share in shaping his own world inside his own university than has been assured him in the past. Even in universities where he has had large influence, in informal and customary ways, he wants formal recognition of an assured right to share largely.

Rapid social change is affecting the character of the university in other ways. From the beginning until very recently, the Canadian university has been an institution which prepared persons to play their part within a well-understood and widely accepted framework of things, fitted them for accepted and well-recognized roles in society. Social change was relatively slow and there was general concurrence, or at least acquiescence, in the existing social arrangements. Much of the effort of the university has gone into transmission of the body of inherited knowledge and the passing on of traditional values through historical, literary, religious, and philosophical studies.

As the pace of change quickens, there is much more questioning whether all this is in the right direction. Indeed, there is much confusion and uncertainty about where it is, in fact, taking us. This is happening just as the university is drawing a higher proportion of its students from social groups that hitherto found the university inaccessible.

Many students who come to the university see no reason to question the purposes and nature of existing economic and occupational structures and see no reason why these should change.

However, growing numbers of students are dissatisfied with the university as they find it and seek to change it. They think its proper function is not so much to educate persons for the elite positions as to generate the ideas which will move the society to change itself for the better. A few of the more extreme and articulate visualize society as being controlled from the top by a few men who lead its major organizations and who they say, conspire to ensure that those subject to their influence, including universities, will remain so. Relatively few students hold the conspiracy theory, but growing numbers of them sense that the universities are, or can be, significant agents of social change. As they come to believe this, they want to share in the shaping of the university to the end that it will be on the side of the angels in the guiding of change.

Both staff and students (ignoring some latent elements of tension between the two groups) are more and more working on the model of the self-regulating community, a community conscious of the common purpose of its members and possessed of all the skills and resources needed to regulate its common life. Except at the extreme, there is no pressure for the full romantic scope of the model; rather demand is for firm control of all that relates directly to teaching and learning.

This is not the model of Canadian university organization as it has been known. Instead, the universities have been governed on a model patterned in many respects on the business corporation, the supreme authority being the Board of Directors, which delegates executive power to a president and other senior officers, all delegation being temporary and subject to recall at the sole discretion of the Board.

At Queen's all, or nearly all, the formal powers conferred on the University by the Royal Charter of 1841 are placed in the hands of the Board of Trustees. The Trustees, in turn, may delegate authority to Faculty Boards, Senate, and other persons and agencies as they see fit. However, the formal structure tells very little about the way in which the University has been governed for at least the last forty years. The Board of Trustees, like the University Council, has drawn its membership very largely from the graduates of Queen's University, that is, from men and women who have known the University from the inside. There has been very substantial delegation of functions and authority to the Senate, Faculty Boards, and through the Senate to the Alma Mater Society. In this way, most of the functions that relate to teaching and learning, subject to overriding financial considerations, have been delegated to Faculty Boards and Senate. Over a long period, the Board of Trustees has not intervened in essentially academic functions.

This long-standing and unvarying practice has clearly added some customary law to the formal law of the Charter and the statutes, making it clear that recommendations coming to the Board from the Principal with the concurrence of the Faculty Boards and/or Senate, express or implied, and on essentially academic issues will be accepted by the Board. So, Faculty Boards and Senate have had for a long time, insofar as they have seen fit to exercise it, power over their internal affairs, resting on firmly settled policy of the Board of Trustees. Also, through delegation by the senate to the Alma Mater Society, wide powers of student self-government in non-academic matters have rested with the students for at least fifty years. Any attempt by the Senate or the Board of Trustees to withdraw, or seriously reduce, this power of student self-government would be regarded as revolutionary.

Looking to the substance rather than to the forms, it will be seen that Queen's University has been in considerable measure and for a long time a self-regulating community. It is clear, too, that what has been delegated to Senate, Faculty Boards and students has really been delegated beyond effective recall and that the main lineaments of the self-regulating community are of daily familiarity.

As the problem of university government at Queen's was explored, it was seen that there was involvement with questions of how to bring together effectively the various constituencies of the University. There are students, there are faculty members, there are senior officers, there are graduates, there are Trustees and benefactors. These are the university community. The basic question is how is it assured that the members of the various constituencies each with their own points of view will come together to achieve the aims of the community. How are they to proceed, in full consciousness of the interest and views of each, to persuasion, compromise and, hopefully, consensus of the community? What provision is needed to cope with faltering or deadlock in the process?

How can things be worked out so that the alumni, benefactors, faculty, senior officers and students relate to one another? A further dimension as well: how can matters be arranged so that the University organism as a whole responds effectively to changing circumstances, internal needs and outside critics?

These objectives can be accomplished with the help of organs of government and processes of government. This is to say, it must be certain (a) that representatives of the various constituencies will come together in appropriate numbers under established procedures, and (b) that certain important processes will be carried on in an agreed manner.

The constituencies are: students, faculties, the graduates and benefactors of the University. The organs of government are: the student societies of the various faculties, the Alma Mater Society, the Faculty Boards, the Senate, the Board of Trustees, and the University Council.

The main purpose of the student societies is to organize those aspects of student life which are of concern primarily to students themselves. It has been traditional at Queen's that the societies regulate many aspects of the interaction among students. This they have done very successfully for a long period of time.

The purpose of each faculty board is to regulate academic matters of primary concern to that Faculty and not affecting directly standards or activities in other faculties. With the growth of the University, the trend towards decentralization and the growing inter-relationships among various disciplines in a faculty, the functions of faculty boards take on greatly increased significance.

The Senate, entirely composed of teachers and scholars except for a few senior officers of the University, is the competent body for decisions on academic matters of University-wide concern.

The Board of Trustees, mainly composed of men and women of large experience beyond the university, is the competent body for assembling financial and physical resources from the wider community and for exercising ultimate authority in fiscal and general management matters.

The Council, composed as it is of members of the Senate and the Board of Trustees, along with an equal number of elected graduates of the University, has a large membership not directly engaged in the work of the University and so provides a most extensive linkage with the public. Its chief functions are (a) to offer advice, and (b) to represent the overall interests of the University to a wider public.

It was suggested that constituencies and bodies should be represented on the Senate as follows: the several Faculties, the Deans, the Principal's administrative group, the students, and the Board of Trustees. The question of representation from those in the first three categories were satisfactorily resolved by the Senate itself. As for the students the Senate considered there should be four student senators, one of whom should be a graduate student, and ultimately this was put into practice. As for the representation from the Board of Trustees the Committee came to the conclusion that it would be unwise to carry it forward at the present time. There was a stated preference for Board-Senate consultation through joint committees rather than Board representation on the Senate.

The Committee also voiced misgivings about faculty and student representation on the Board, taking into account that it would be necessary to get parliamentary approval for amendments to the statutes governing the University, it was recommended that for the time being, at least, there should be no change in the composition of the Board of Trustees. It was agreed, however, that there should be an experimental period to assess the results of the enlarged role of the Senate, and that after two or three years of experience there should be a review of the situation to see whether clear distinctions between the functions of the Board and Senate are being maintained and whether channels of communication between the two bodies can be enlarged and kept clear.

Directed by the Senate to "examine the structure and procedures of the Senate and to recommend ways and means by which the business of the Senate may be transacted more expeditiously, the committee on university government, at the outset of its deliberations, took the view that it was impossible to review the internal structure and procedures of the Senate without considering first the purposes and functions of the Senate which its structure and procedures must serve.

By the Royal Charter of 1841 the Trustees of Queen's College were empowered and directed to constitute "a Court to be called 'The College Senate' which, after the formative stage, was to consist of 'the Principal and all the Professors.'" Its original purposes was "for the exercise of Academical superintendence and discipline over the students and all other persons resident within the same, and with such powers for maintaining order and enforcing obedience to the Statutes, Rules, and Ordinances of the said College, as to the said Board may seem meet and necessary." The Charter gives the Senate authority to confer degrees of Bachelor, Master and Doctor "in the several Arts and Faculties."

By an Act of the Ontario legislature in 1874 and by an Act of Parliament of Canada in 1882, the Senate was given, in identical terms, specific power to pass by-laws concerning the conditions under which degrees might be conferred, though the same legislation also provided that such by-laws had to be reported promptly to the Board of Trustees and that they should cease to have effect if the Board disapproved them.

An Act of the Parliament of Canada, passed in 1912, made provision for a change in the constitution of the Senate, but left it to the Board of Trustees to make the change. Subsequently, in April, 1913, the Trustees approved a new composition for the Senate and a revised statement of functions as recommended in the Principal's Report of 1912-13. Under these arrangements the composition of the Senate was altered by the introduction of the elective principle, but the Senate remained a purely academic and internal body and the supreme authority on all academic matters.

The 1913 statement of the Senate's functions is the most recent official statement of them; it is the one which provides the constitutional definition for the present work of the Senate.

Since that time, however, large changes have occurred, both inside and outside the University, which throw doubt on the 1913 definition as an adequate statement of the Senate's functions in relation to the present and future needs of the University.

During the past fifty years, and especially since World War Two, the University has expanded greatly. In 1913 sixty-eight professors in five Faculties taught 1,641 students; in 1967 five hundred and one professors in four Faculties and four schools taught 5,278 students. Not only have faculty and students multiplied, but the educational program has become more comprehensive. The older Faculties have broadened their curricula and have extended into the field of graduate studies; new Faculties and Schools have been established.

One of the most striking features of this expansion, from the point of view of the government of the University, is that it has been accompanied by a progressive devolution of powers and functions upon the major academic units. The Faculty boards, in particular, have taken over more and more responsibility for developing the curriculum, for setting and administering standards of admission for revising the calendars, for conducting examinations, and for awarding scholarships, medals, prizes, and degrees. Similarly, there has been a delegation, consistently supported, to the Alma Mater Society of authority over the discipline and social activities of students. On the whole these things are as they should be. Devolution of responsibility has obtained for the University some of the advantages of flexibility and decentralization. One effect has been to produce vigorous Faculties and Schools effectively concerned to protect and improve educational standards. Another consequence is a strong tradition of responsible self-government by the students over a sector of their affairs.

It has to be acknowledged, however, that many of the advantages of academic decentralization have been obtained at the sacrifice of the real, though not the formal, power of the Senate and through an exercise of self-abnegation on the part of the Senate in the discharge of many of the functions constitutionally signed to it. With respect to a broad segment of its traditional functions the Senate, though retaining formal power, acts only on the recommendation of other bodies. In this respect it acts by placing the stamp of final academic approval on decisions which have in fact already been taken elsewhere. To the extent that this is so, the Senate occupies a position somewhat akin to that of a constitutional monarch possessing full de jure, but little real power and discharging functions which in the Senate have become formal rather than substantial in nature. It is not surprising, therefore, that in this process of devolution the Senate has suffered a loss of authority and prestige and, perhaps more importantly, of vitality. This consequence, of itself, need not give cause for lament. Functions and responsibilities, which in the past the Senate may have addressed itself to more seriously and more intensively, are now being discharged with greater success by the other bodies upon whom they have devolved.

The new tasks arise, for the most part, out of changes which have occurred outside the University and out of the new social and political context within which this University, in common with every other modern university, finds itself. Today, a university education has become an increasingly necessary requirement imposed by a complex and volatile society. The universities themselves, in their research laboratories and their libraries, are among the most important forces generating new knowledge and with it, technological and social change. For these reasons higher education has become a central concern of public policy. This concern has brought the universities into close relations with the political and economic institutions which have placed heavy new demands upon them and which are furnishing a larger and larger share of the resources which they require. As these relations multiply and become more pervasive, they circumscribe the autonomy of university decisions and give rise to the possibility that universities will grow solely in response to external needs and pressures. There can be no question that universities must continue to respond to the needs of society, but it is equally true that, if they are to be leaders rather than servants of society, they ought to retain some control over their own destinies. To do so, they will have to undertake more effective, more systematic, and more comprehensive planning of their affairs than they have in the past. Each university will have to clarify its objectives and be prepared to present and, if necessary defend them before governments and the public.

There is a further and practical argument for internal university planning. The universities are presently engaged in an intense world-wide competition for the best staff and the best students. Although no single prescription for success in this competition will suffice, it is safe to say that the prizes are more likely to go to those universities which give evidence of knowing where they are going and how they mean to get there.

If university planning is to embody academic values, it will have to engage the thought and energy of academics, and it will have to do so at every level of the university structure — departmental, Faculty and university-wide. Fortunately the presence of this necessity happens to coincide with the appearance, in recent years of a whole set of new aspirations on the part of the faculty and the students of the university.

University professors, increasingly aware that their services are in short supply and conscious of the further fact that the quality of a university education and the prestige of a university depend, more than anything else, on the quality of the faculty, have grown more self-confident in recent years and have developed a larger sense of their own identity and interests as a profession. They desire, in particular, to take a larger part in university decisions, not only in their departments and Faculties, but at the highest levels of university government where decisions shape the character of the universities which they serve. These aspirations have found expression at a national level in the report of the Duff-Berdahl Commission on University Government in Canada and, here at Queen's, in reports which have been submitted to Senate by several of the principal units of faculty, including the Faculty of Arts and Science, the Faculty of Law, the Faculty of Medicine, and Faculty Association, all of whom have responded to the Principal's invitation to make their views known on the Duff-Berdahl Report. Much of the argument in these various documents, which have been carefully noted by the Committee, converges upon the Senate as the body most fully representative of the university faculty, calls it to assume a larger and more active role in planning the development of the university, and recommends certain changes in its composition.

Somewhat similar aspirations are to be found in another vitally important part of the university — the student body. University students generally have become less patient with authority and more concerned about the relevance of traditional educational programs and methods to the unstable world about them. They are also disturbed by the impersonality with which modern universities, as large and rapidly growing institutions, have become invested. They are looking, therefore, for ways of bringing their views and concerns to bear upon university decisions, and they are seeking, as well, to improve communications as a means of restoring community life. Some of the aspirations are clearly reflected in the brief which the Alma Mater Society submitted on Student Participation within the University at Queen's. Although the brief does not deal with the functions of Senate, it assumes that the Senate is engaged in important work and requests direct student representation on that body, so that the viewpoint of students may be presented at the highest levels and so that students may become better informed about important decisions affecting their interests.

This combination of new university needs for planned development and of new aspirations on the part of faculty and students presents the Senate with the opportunity to realize its full potential and become the central academic forum of the university for deliberation and decision of issues of the highest importance.

The great unresolved questions of the moment are what kind of university Queen's ought to become during the next fifty years and how she can become so. In the effort that must be made to answer these questions, the Senate can aid powerfully by clarifying objectives; by constructing a consensus in support of them; by initiating, considering and deciding upon proposals for the improvement of the University's educational program; by helping to formulate priorities for the achievement of accepted objectives; and by preserving a sense of community in a period of rapid change.

With these considerations in mind the Committee offered for consideration a revised set of Senate functions: to determine all matters of an academic character which affect the University as a whole, and to be concerned with all matters which affect the welfare of the University, to participate in planning the development of the University; to grant all honorary degrees; to review the main elements of the approved operating budget of the University; to advise as to what buildings and other capital facilities are required to meet the needs of the University and in what order of priority.

In addition it was recommended that the Senate should have the responsibility for the well-being of students and to have final responsibility for their discipline including the power to dismiss students for cause. The Alma Mater Society shares responsibility for, and has the right to promote, the well-being of its members. In the discharge of its disciplinary power the Senate shall have regard to the initial responsibility of the Alma Mater Society for the discipline of students in non-academic matters; the Senate may review the decisions of the Alma Mater Society with respect to the discipline of students and may take such action as it deems appropriate.

The Committee viewed the Senate as the principal instrument through which the University can best adapt itself to the changing conditions which are described above. For this reason the Committee recommended a revised set of functions which prescribed for the Senate a larger role in the direction of the University's affairs, and, particularly, in shaping the University's development. For the same reason the Committee recommended an altered composition for the Senate. The proposed functions would not, however, assign to the Senate the power to make all decisions, or even all the important decisions, affecting the health of the University; nor would they convert the Senate or any other body into an organ of unlimited power. A university, properly conceived, is a pluralistic society in which power — the power to decide and the power to act — is and ought to be widely diffused.

The proposed set of functions for the Senate reduce, in certain respects, the powers and responsibilities of the Board of Trustees, but the Board had already delegated many of these powers to the Senate and Faculty Boards. The final responsibility of the Board of Trustees for the fiscal health of the University and, more specifically as stated in the Charter, for the erection of "edifices," for "the management of the revenues and property of the College," and for the salaries of "the Professors, Officers, and Servants thereof," remain unimpaired. It remains the final responsibility of the Board to consolidate and improve the financial resources of the University, to raise money and provide for its orderly disbursement in harmony with the educational objectives and policies of the University as defined by the Senate.

Finally, it should be said that the functions of the Senate will not impede the Board in its discharge of a further and important function which, although nowhere explicit in the Charter, or the Statutes, is inherent in the principle of public trusteeship. This is the dual function of interpreting the community to the University and of interpreting the University to the community. The Board of Trustees can and does play a vital role in helping to bring to bear upon the University the needs and concerns of the outside community and, conversely, in explaining and, where necessary, defending the policy and conduct of the University to the outside community. In its exercise of this role, and especially during a period of rapid technological and social change, the Board can help the University to respond effectively to altering social needs, and equally it can help powerfully to sustain public confidence in the University.

The Senate can discharge its functions most efficiently through a system of standing committees supplemented where necessary to deal with problems of a non-recurrent nature, by special committees appointed for the purpose. It would be the duty of the committees to consider matters referred to them by the Senate and falling within their particular areas of interest, and to present recommendations supported by the fullest possible information and by the clear exposition of alternatives.

SELF-STUDY LAUNCHED

The Board of Directors authorizes comprehensive survey designed to examine the structure and organization of the Alumni Association and to re-examine its aims and purposes in meeting challenges prevailing today

● A comprehensive self-study program, involving all the branches and hundreds of alumni in Canada and the United States, has been launched by the Queen's Alumni Association.

The survey is designed to examine the structures and organization of the Association and to re-examine the aims and purposes of the Association in these changing times. The Association was formed in 1926 and has operated with reasonable success for more than forty years, but it was felt that at a time when the University was facing all sorts of challenges from within and without the Association might profitably for all concerned investigate whether it was constituted to do the best job possible for the alumni and the University.

A commission has been set up consisting of the officers of the Association, the three past presidents, the secretary, and the president of the affiliated Alumnae Association, "to establish guidelines to be followed, to elicit from the members suggestions, and to act as deemed necessary to draw up a report making specific recommendations as to the structure, intent, and activity of the Alumni Association."

The Commission has held four meetings, and its first move was to set up a two-day conference at the University to which were invited all branch presidents or other representatives. The expenses were borne by the University.

The opening session featured Principal J. J. Deutsch who gave a state-of-the-union address, followed by a spirited question-and-answer period. At a dinner meeting, Dr. T. S. Webster, Dean of Student Affairs, spoke frankly on "Student Unrest."

On the second day of the conference discussions were divided into specific areas, with a leader for each: Alumni Office Administration, Branches, Review, Alumni Fund, Alumni-Student Relationships, Alumni Association Relationships with the University, Reunions, and the Queen's Tradition.

The conference was followed by mandates to individuals and branches to conduct detailed studies. At the same time an effort will be made to obtain opinions from alumni at large on all subjects whether designated or not. In other words, it is to be a wide-open attempt at self-analysis.

The Commission is not looking for a whitewash of past policies, but rather a frank exchange of ideas out of which it is hoped to build a stronger Alumni Association which can better carry out its aims and objectives.

AROUND THE CAMPUS

Chip Drury, captain of the ski team, wins the Jenkins Trophy, top athletic award—Queen's and McGill join in establishing University Press—Dr. John Orr leaves Queen's $280,000 — will begin three semesters

Wins Jenkins Trophy

The Jenkins Trophy, top athletic award, was presented this year to Chip Drury, captain of the ski team. He also won the Paul Allen Trophy for the third year in succession for having the highest aggregate point total for all Ontario-Quebec Athletic Association ski meets.

A highlight of the program was the presentation of the Vanier Cup, emblematic of the Canadian senior Intercollegiate football championship, and other awards including the Western Bowl Trophy, and the Yates Cup, to the Golden Gaels. Skip Eaman won the most valuable player award.

Speaker of the evening was Sam Koffman, owner and proprietor of the Belle Claire Hotel, Ottawa, and enthusiastic supporter of all Queen's teams.

REQUIRE LARGE ACREAGE

By 1974-75 Queen's may require between twenty and thirty acres of residential land costing millions of dollars to meet residence needs for single and married students, according to campus planner Graham Andrews.

CLOSED CIRCUIT TELEVISION

Mrs. Beverley Lazier, former instructor in the Department of Biology, has been made manager of closed circuit television for the university. The Department was previously directly responsible for the network and though it still is the prime user of the educational circuit the system is now to be used by a variety of other departments.

McGill-Queen's University Press

Queen's and McGill have announced the establishment of a joint university press under the title "McGill-Queen's University Press." The new organization will succeed the McGill University Press which is already established. Both universities will share equally in ownership, management and financing.

The chief function of the joint venture will be to stimulate and publish scholarly research and such other material as the editorial committee considers suitable. The committee will convene alternately at McGill and Queen's. Robin H. Strachan, formerly director of McGill University Press, has been appointed director of the McGill-Queen's University Press and H. Pearson Gundy, professor in the Department of English, editor of the Queen's Quarterly, and formerly university librarian, has been appointed associate director and senior editor.

Studies indicate there is room for a stronger English-language university press in Eastern Canada than either Queen's or McGill could achieve separately. The joint press will continue to contract with commercial printers for its printing and binding work, since the establishment of a printing plant is not intended. The first books bearing the new McGill-Queen's University Press imprint are expected to be published early in 1969. A catalogue of books recently issued and those to be printed during 1969 will be available shortly.

Iron Ore Samples Taken From Harbour

A drilling team moved rigs out on the ice of the Kingston harbour in February to take samples of ore from the harbour bed for the first time since the first survey was made twenty-nine years ago. Ore samples were taken from the main area of the deposit about 2,000 feet out, directly in front of the City's water purification plant.

The company in charge was set up in 1965 and is known as Kingston Mineral Development Ltd. It is composed of three representatives of the University and three of the City. The University and City will share expenses and potential profits equally. If the ore deposit proves to be extensive Kingston Mineral Development Ltd. will negotiate with a mining company to carry out operations. There is an undertaking that the rights of residents living on the waterfront will be protected and that nothing will be done to disturb "the amenities of Kingston harbour."

Miss Hilda Neatby To Write History

Miss Hilda Neatby, head of the Department of History at the University of Saskatchewan, has accepted a commission to write a history of Queen's University. She is the author of the controversial book on pre-university education, So Little for the Mind.

Dr. Neatby will come to Queen's and begin work on the book in the summer of 1970. It will trace the development of the University within the setting of the economic, social, cultural, and religious history of the Canadian people. The project will take about three years.

Dr. Neatby will also teach in the Queen's history department.

Dr. John Orr Leaves Bequest

Dr. John Orr, Med. '23, who devoted a lifetime of service to Queen's until his death in 1965, has left a bequest of $280,000 to the University. His sister, who died in January, 1969, left an estate of $40,000 to Queen's.

Dr. Orr was president of the Alumni Association 1963-65. He was a member of the teaching staff at Queen's from 1925 until his retirement in 1963, at which time he was head of the Department of Bacteriology. He then became director of Residence Planning. He was also director of the provincial government's health laboratories in Kingston.

A tribute to Dr. Orr written by Dr. Mackintosh read, in part: "His life and work endure, securely built into the fabric and spirit of Queen's University."

Other bequests: a scholarship fund of $25,000 from the estate of D. A. Gilles, Arts '05, a former member of the Board of Trustees and a past president of the Alumni Association; an equal share with the University of Guelph, in the estate of Wilhelmina Humphries — the estate of $30,000 to $40,000 is to be used to establish a bursary trust; Dr. I. F. Kinard, M.Sc. '18, LL.D. '53, left Queen's an unrestricted bequest of $10,000 which will be placed in the Consolidated Awards Capital Fund.

BEGIN TWELVE-MONTH YEAR

Final-year Medical students will, as of this June, begin a twelve-month, instead of a seven-month academic year in which they will care for patients and receive $1,200 in pay. This program of "clinical clerkships" eliminates the year of "junior rotating internship" formerly taken after graduation.

Prof. W. R. Graham, noted Canadian historian, has joined the history department at Queen's as Douglas Professor of Canadian history. He is shown in the chair that goes with the post.

BEGIN THREE SEMESTERS

Queen's will begin a three-semester system next summer for some of its graduate students.

Graduate students now work within a two-semester system that finishes early in May. In the three-semester program they will work through the summer, both on research and course work.

Provincial grants in the past have been based on two semesters. When the new plan comes into effect the amounts will not change, but they will be spread over twelve months. Universities which do not adopt three semesters will lose one-third of their provincial grants.

The move was made necessary to speed up the production of graduates — especially in the social sciences and humanities.

Min. She was haughty at times and so were many of the overseas professors. In those days instead of a protest march we enjoyed a good laugh in our rooms. Later I realized that at that date Miss Gordon was the drudge of the English Department. She marked our essays and discussed them in seminars. We recognized her ability and would have welcomed her as a lecturer.

Lillie A. Traver, Arts '14

Dear Mr. Editor:

The picture of the class of the Faculty of Education that appeared in the January-February Review was that of the 1918-19 class—the last Class was that of 1919-20. The 1918-19 group came in before the war was over which accounts for the scarcity of men. The next year was different.

About half of that class were men and all but one or two were just out of the army. The Ontario overnment had enticed us in by promising to give us, the army types, free books and tuition and a living allowance until the opening of school the following September. High school teachers were scarce, and men particularly so. In return we had to sign an agreement to teach in Ontario for at least three years.

I was the class president that year and so was involved a little in the fight to hold the Faculty at Queen's. I headed a

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Mr. Editor:

I should like to say a word for Miss Gordon as we knew her in '13 and '14. At that time she was very attractive in appearance and a fountain of energy. I can still see her hurrying to the seminar—clear Scotch complexion, a mass of golden hair, perfectly tailored white shirt waiste and black tie, tweed skirt and brogues, gown fluttering. We called her Minnie—it seemed more respectful than Representatives of H & M Tax savers Ltd., met with Finance Minister Benson recently to present a brief on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada, requesting a deduction allowance of the cost of preparing income tax returns. Left to right: Kenneth F. Lewis, B.Com. '59, W. A. Kelly, B.Com. '58, LL.B. '61, Walker M.

Smith, B.Com. '58, LL.B. '62, Tax savers directors; Gary Strickler, B.Sc. '62 (M.B.A., McGill), vice-president, marketing; Edgar Benson, B.Com. '49, minister of finance, and J. Paul Haynes, Tax savers' president. The five men from Tax savers were all students of Mr. Benson when he was teaching at Queen's.

student delegation sent to Toronto to interview the Minister of Education. Our expenses were supposed to be paid by the University, but I think that G. Y. Chown really footed the bill. The Minister received us very courteously, but we didn't really get any answers. What the University was told was that if it would forego a much-needed grant to the Medical Faculty the Faculty of Education would be allowed to remain. I think the University authorities had a pretty shrewd idea that that would only put off the dissolution of the Faculty of Education for a year or so. And so they refused the offer, and the Faculty went.

The Department of Education's excuse was that the Faculty was inefficient and much too expensive. I still have a copy of an open letter written by Dr. H. T. J. Coleman, the Dean, that makes these statements into complete nonsense. The real reason was probably some kind of jockeying for power in the Department. The wrong people won, so far as Queen's and Western were concerned.

AFTER THIRTY YEARS

Dr. J. A. Corry reviews his career at Queen's and traces the difference in attitudes of university teachers that has developed since he joined the staff, in an address delivered to the alumni of the Montreal Branch

Dr. J. A. Corry was honoured on April 22 with a dinner and the presentation of the medal of the Montreal branch of the Alumni Association. In making the presentation on behalf of the branch, Rev. Dr. A. M. Lavery said:

"James Alexander Corry, the thirteenth Principal of Queen's University, has brought honour and distinction to a high office and has given signal leadership to the Universities of this Dominion and of the Commonwealth. His balanced judgment, his close and courteous attention to advocates of varying points of view, his persuasive and persistent championship of what he believes to be best, his unfailing good humour and ready wit have been the envy of many and have endeared him to his friends and colleagues. Throughout the changing and even turbulent climate of the years of his Principalship his enchantment with the past never dulled his interest in experiment in the present and he continues to move with style and confidence along the road ahead."

● The honour you do me here moves me very deeply. I am inclined to say "all this and heaven too," at the hands of Queen's University! At Queen's University I have had more than thirty years of deep and continuing satisfaction, because I was given the chance to study and teach subjects where my greatest interest, and I think also, where my best talents lay. I think it is safe now to speak of the risks that Queen's University took on me when they appointed me to teach Political Science, a subject I had never studied and which I had never taught. Put baldly like this, it sounds like a reckless appointment, quite out of character with the normal caution of Queen's University, and I still find it puzzling. The only explanation I can give is that at the time the appointment was under consideration, Dr. W. E. McNeill, that specious gambler, was acting Principal and confirmed the appointment. I know there are endless stories about his caution, but I have never believed them without reservations.

. . . . My retirement last August has appeared to me an important milestone — the completion of nearly fifty years of association with universities as student of law, teacher of law, teacher of political science, and so on. I have been thinking of the extraordinary changes in the universities in that period. They are all much bigger than they were then, and they are more amply supplied with better prepared teachers (I could not now get a job teaching in the university with the preparation I had at the time I began). Also, students are much better prepared than they were. Even if some of them are more intractable, they are as a whole better equipped, more tolerant and sophisticated than the students of my time were. One of the great differences in the attitude of students is, of course, a change of circumstances, as well as a change of mood: in the interval the discipline of poverty has for the most part disappeared.

As I think back about the attitudes of my fellow students and myself, I recall how grateful we were for the opportunity to study at a university, how impressed we were with what we thought was a great privilege. Because we so regarded it, we were on the whole extremely prudent to keep from doing anything which might loosen our grasp on the privilege. We were, for the most part, bent on trying to better ourselves with relatively little concern for what happened around us in the social and political spheres. This amounts to saying that we were essentially individualist in outlook, in keeping with the temper of the times, and did not feel much responsibility for trying to control the course the world was taking. Nowadays, students are, I think, less self-centred than we were, and because opportunities for university study are much easier now, they are not nearly so grateful for the opportunity.

In part, perhaps, we were influenced by what we saw as the scarcity value of a university education. Many of us knew very few graduates of universities, and therefore tended to look on them as exalted creatures. At the present time, perhaps, it is true to say that most students have seen too many university graduates, and are not all that impressed by them. I think there is some evidence for saying that zeal and gratitude of students today varies inversely with the density of the university graduates in the community from which they come.

So much for the change in the outlook of students. I now turn to consider the changes in the attitudes and outlook of university teachers. When we, my teaching colleagues and I in the early years, got our first university appointments, we could hardly believe our luck. I kept on pinching myself for years. I recall a friend of those days, so greatly excited to get the offer of a teaching post. He went home and told his wife, and poured out the story of what he was going to teach and what his duties were going to be. When she got a chance to get in a realistic word, she asked "What are they going to pay you." My friend answered that he did not think to ask them!

The reasons for this kind of feeling are easy enough to understand. Opportunities of every kind were very limited, and none so limited as opportunities to teach in a university. When I became a full-time teacher of law, there were not more than ten-fifteen full-time law teachers in the whole country. When I first began to teach political science, there were not more than fifteen-twenty full-time teachers in that subject in Canada. We were surprised at our luck. We all thought it wildly improbable that any other university would ever make such an offer, and we had not sufficient nerve to take any avoidable risk of losing the appointment we had. In fact, we would not have been surprised at any time to have been fired, on the grounds of our inadequacy. It took me at least nearly ten years to gain the confidence that a young Ph.D. now has on the first day of his appointment. But as I have already told you, I did come out of it! When Queen's University offered me an appointment to teach a subject I had never studied formally or taught, I did not hesitate. I said, "Of course I can do that."

We expected to be fully absorbed in teaching, and in improving our knowledge so that we would be better teachers of the subjects under our care. We always thought we needed to know more about them. We did not expect to have much time for research, because we expected, and of course were correct in that expectation, to be called on unexpectedly to teach another or an additional course. In the first fifteen years of teaching, I taught eighteen different courses. It may seem strange, but I did not resent this, because I was interested in broadening my knowledge and extending my grasp of the field in which I was a teacher. Neither have I ever regretted it because it made me a generalist and prevented me from being seduced into specialties in depth. This training stood me in good stead as Principal, because I never blushed from trying to appear knowledgeable on matters about which I knew very little.

For twenty years, my associates and I took almost no interest in university government. We wanted to study and teach, and did not want to be distracted by other matters. It is, as I see it now, extremely strange that a Professor of Political Science should not have taken more than a passing interest in the way in which his own university was governed. My fellows and I thought that the President, or Principal, was unquestionably a tower of wisdom, and we equally felt that we had no particular competence for the vast issues in which he was at home.

Anyway, we knew how narrow university resources were. We knew we had to make them go as far as they would go in the cause of education, and accordingly we accepted teaching duties and a lot of other chores that kept our minds off university government. Of course, we came in the end to see that many of these chores were a poor use of our time, and also that we should have been more concerned about the way in which the university was run. Further, seeing that I am trying to be honest about the past, I must add that I had learned before the end of my teaching career that a university president is not always of necessity a tower of wisdom. Still later, I confirmed this from my own experience.

One of the consequences of the narrowness of university resources was isolation. There were little or no funds for travel or for attending conferences, and the salaries paid did not leave much margin for going around on one's own account. As a teacher of law at the University of Saskatchewan for nine years, I never met the two full-time law teachers at the University of Alberta, which was the closest university engaged in the teaching of law. This was not an unusual experience, and it meant that we rarely met with our opposite numbers at other universities to compare salaries and other grievances. We did not think seriously about trying to found an association of university teachers: in fact, we found it almost indelicate to ask for a raise.

I need not say how different things are now! From the vantage point of the present it is, of course, hard to understand our mood and attitudes. The biggest element in shaping that mood was no doubt the straitened circumstances of the pioneer era, out of which the universities were only slowly emerging in the first thirty years of my association with universities. Also, there were few invidious comparisons to be made with salaries in other occupations. Our attitude too was partly a defect of colonial-mindedness, a deference to authority, and delays in gaining self-confidence. It is easy to see now that our lives must have been narrow and confined. But we did not know it. In retrospect, these seem like the good days. We had standards for ourselves and our students which we got satisfaction in upholding, and we certainly did not lack integrity in applying them.

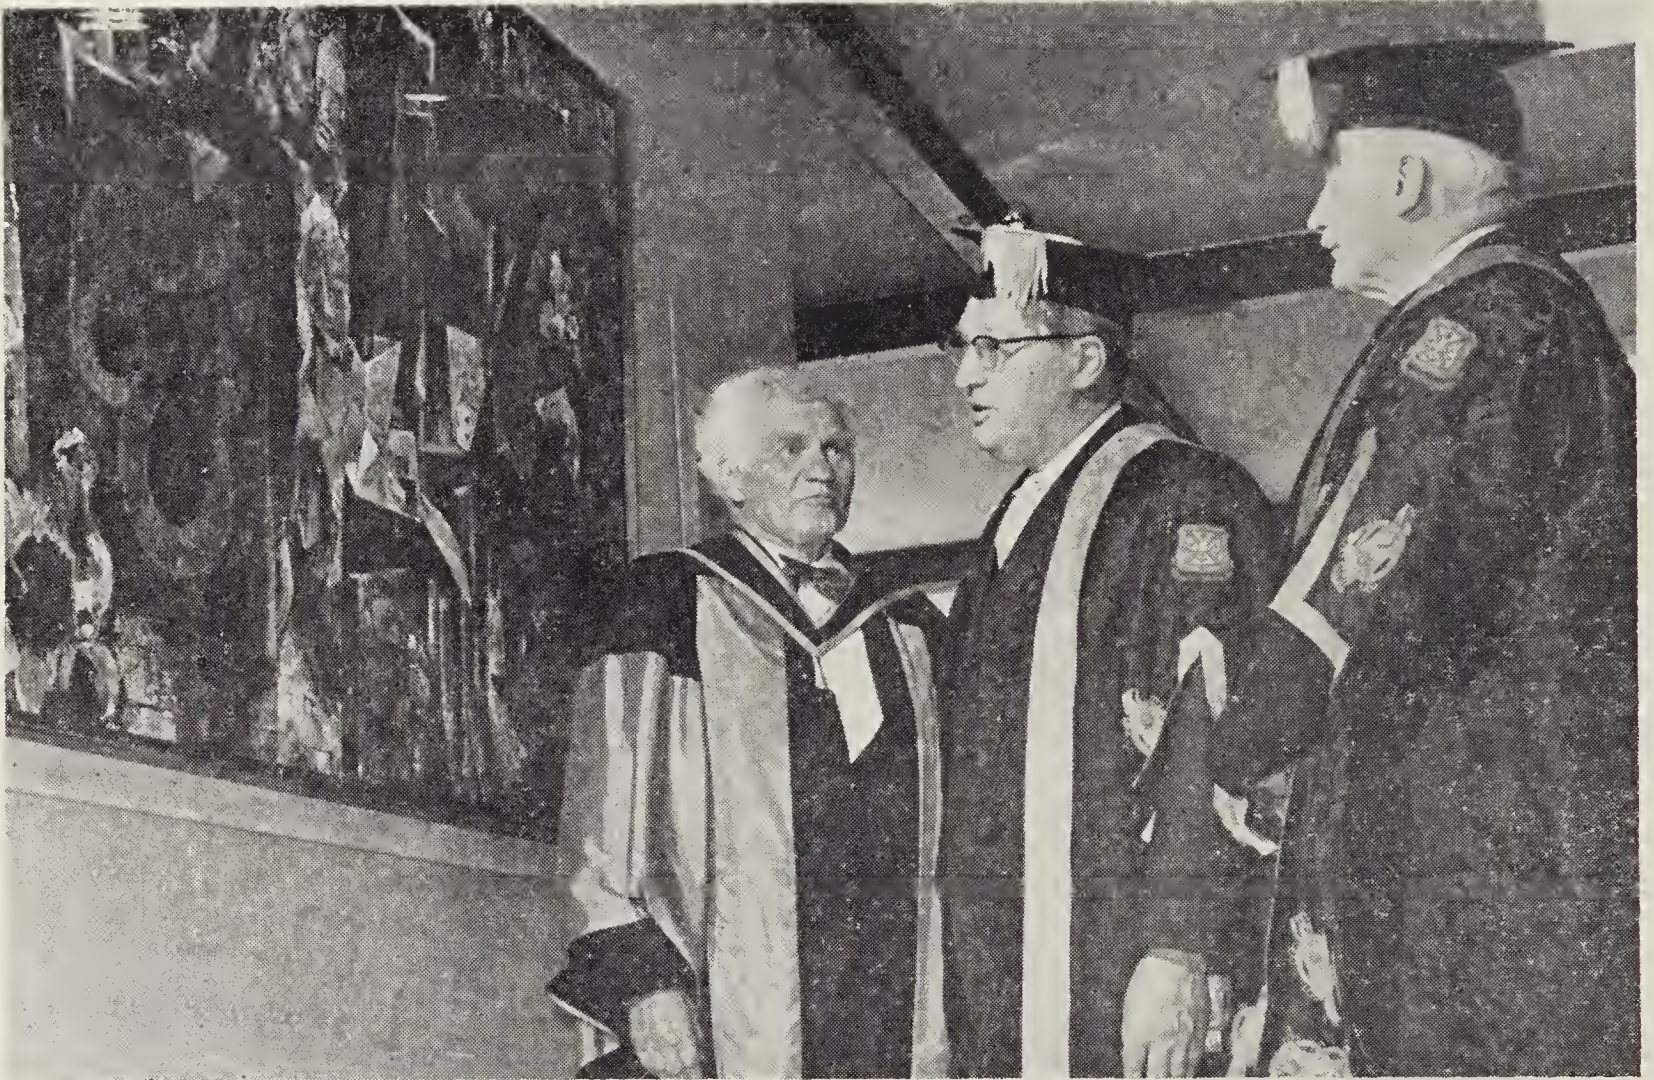

If we are to judge the present stance of university teachers nowadays, we must have some perspective. Of course, university teachers today are much more demanding, but we must realize how spacious are the other opportunities now open to them. Ours was not a time of rising expectations. At present, university teachers are a rising class, and it is rising classes and not the oppressed classes that make revolutions. Moreover, and more important, it would be quite wrong, as well as quite impossible, to have university teachers today doing the variety of chores we did. It was, as I have said, a poor use of resources. It would also be quite unworkable today because of the international competition for university teachers, and because of the differential opportunities everywhere.

The man, or the woman, who commits himself to a university career is entitled to ask that it provide a good opportunity for deploying his talents. In other employments, he can hope to get steadily rising salaries and also a wide range of supporting services which enable him to stay at his main job. Universities have therefore been compelled, and rightly compelled, to be competitive in salaries and in the range of supporting services that are needed. These changed circumstances explain in large measure the rapidly rising operating costs of the universities. For a long time they were financed on a shoestring, but in the end the shoestring frayed out and there was no choice but to make up a host of deficiencies very quickly. Accordingly, university costs have risen much faster than the numbers of their students, or their annual output of graduates.

You know, of course, that very few of those who speak wistfully of the good old days ever want to go back to them. While I can indulge in nostalgia from time to time, I certainly would not want to go back to them. Canadian universities have enjoyed a great liberation in the past fifteen years or so. They have escaped from the cramping and confining circumstances which limited them for so long. It is to me a great satisfaction to have shared in the action of the time that brought all this about.

CONVOCATION

Prof. Andre Bieler, former resident artist at Queen's, stands proudly by as the Principal, Dr. J. J. Deutsch, centre, and the Chancellor, Dr. J. B. Stirling, right, admire the painting presented to the Agnes Etherington Art Centre by the Federation of Canadian artists in honour of Professor Bieler, who was awarded an honorary Doctor of Law Degree at Spring Convocation. Other big news of the weekend was the re-election of Dr. Stirling as Chancellor.

Anne Lapinsky of Morrisburg has her hair adjusted by her husband Gerald before having her picture taken after Convocation. She won nine awards in the Faculty of Medicine, including the prize for the highest standing.

R. C. E. Bray, and Lucinda M. Bray, made Convocation a highly personal affair when they both graduated. Mr. Bray, who obtained his B.Sc. in mining at Queen's in 1937, and later a M.Sc. from McGill, received his M.Sc. degree in mining, while daughter Lucinda, obtained honours B.A. in English and Drama.

Arthur Young, Demorestville, Ont., is shown below, centre, with some of his classmates in the graduating class of Nursing Science. Mr. Young was the only male in a class of 57 to receive a Bachelor of Nursing Science.

Let Us Now Praise Famous Men

V. H. Fiddes

D. V. LePan

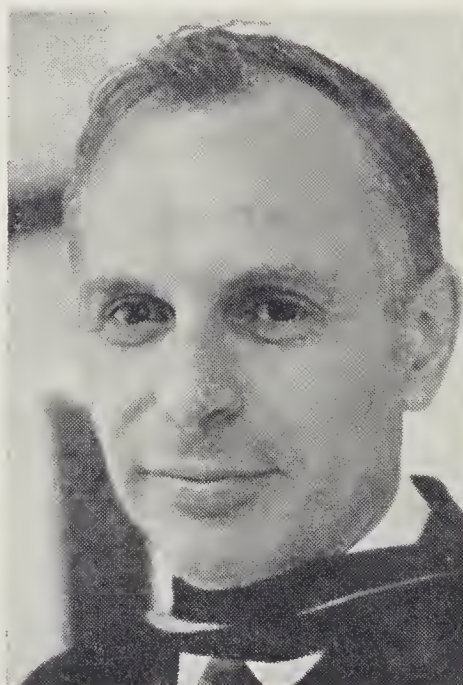

Victor Henry Fiddes, D.D.—graduate of this University, and of the University of Toronto; whom we honour as one who successfully has sought to join the lineaments of a faith to the design of the buildings in which it is nurtured and grows; whose ministry has led him to contemplate the waving grain of the prairies, the bold beauty of Niagara, the problems of the inner city of Metropolitan Toronto, and the turbulence of Montreal; and who now brings the wisdom of his pastoral and administrative experience to the problem of composing a common liturgy for the United and Anglican Churches.

Douglas Valentine Le Pan, LL.D.—graduate of the Universities of Toronto and Oxford, Associate of Harvard, lately Professor of English Literature at Queen's; adviser to Ministers and Prime Ministers; economist, scholar, poet, novelist and teacher; not the least of whose achievements was to bring style to the report of a Royal Commission; and who now turns his varied experience in statecraft to the high art of diplomacy as Principal of University College, at the University of Toronto.

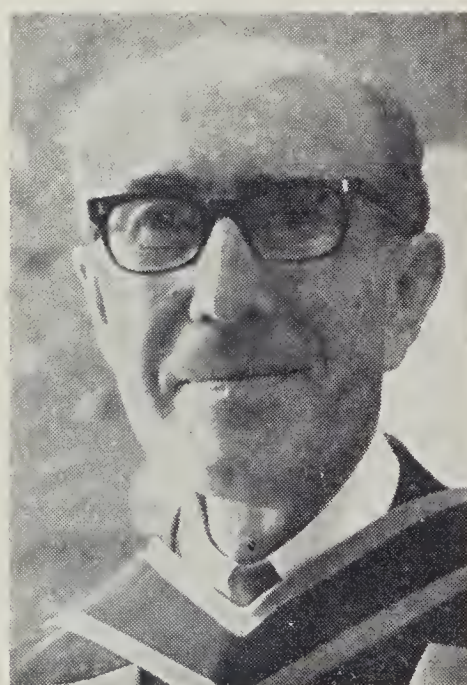

Louis Secondo Renzoni, D.Sc.—son of the Nickel Belt, graduate of this university, student of chemistry and chemical processes, eager and resourceful engineer, imaginative leader of one of Canada's great industries; master of brimstone, fire, and water, a magician whose power over ores of copper, nickel, and cobalt have earned him the enthusiastic respect of patent officers, production staff, and now professors.

L. S. Renzoni

C. A. McLaurin

Samuel Freedman

Irving Kaplansky

E. C. Hughes

A. C. Bieler

Colin Archibald McLaurin, D.Sc.—distinguished graduate of the University of Toronto in Aeronautical Engineering; whose humanitarian and pioneering instincts led him to research through which he applied his skills and knowledge of engineering to alleviate human disability among patients of all ages, and in many nations; and whom we honour at Queen's for his particular genius in finding the simple answer to the complex problem and, in so doing, fostering a true partnership between medicine and engineering.

Samuel Freedman, LL.D.—graduate of the University of Manitoba who became its exemplary Chancellor; whom we honour as a wise scholar and articulate judge of the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench, and Court of Appeal; as a champion of liberalism, dedicating his eloquent mastery of the English language, his penetrating intellect and his imagination to the recognition and preservation of the inherent worth and dignity of the individual; and as a man whose humility and fairness, flowing from a sensitive and informed social conscience, make him representative of the very best elements of western democracy.

Irving Kaplansky, LL.D.—graduate of the University of Toronto and of Harvard, first North American winner of the Putnam Contest, and now Professor of Mathematics at the University of Chicago; who, as an undergraduate but accomplished composer, brought cries of outrage from the established Toronto music critics for a jocular overture based on a theme of J. S. Bach; and whom we honour as a Canadian whose clarity of lectures, elegance of writing, and profundity of research have won him widespread acclaim as the greatest mathematician this country has so far produced.

Everett Cherrington Hughes, LL.D.—sensitive and perceptive student of society, and consummate teacher who, through brilliant example, has given to generations of students at McGill, Chicago and elsewhere an insatiable curiosity about social reality; who, with his Canadian wife, feels as much at home here as in his own United States; who, as an early American in a Canadian university, has made an enduring contribution to our better understanding of French Canada; and whom we honour as a man of deep integrity and passionate intellectual commitment, who has fashioned a code of intellectual behaviour that does honour to us all.

André Charles Bieler, LL.D.—member of the Royal Canadian Academy, lately Resident Artist and Professor of Art at this university; who, as a teacher, conveyed the excitement of learning so skilfully to his students that they and he became true partners; whose great energy and vision, expressed through the first Conference of the Arts in Canada, led to the formation of the Federation of Canadian Artists, and the Canadian Arts Council; whose creation and development of the Agnes Etherington Art Centre have brought this university into close harmony with the community of Kingston; and whom we honour as an artist of great versatility, giving to his subjects the colour, vitality and the warm humanity which he himself brings to the art of living.

AROUND THE CAMPUS

Dr. G. A. Harrower Appointed Vice-Principal (Academic)

Dr. G. A. Harrower, who is retiring as Dean of Arts and Science, has been appointed Vice-Principal (Academic). He succeeds Prof. F. W. Gibson, who is returning to full-time teaching and research at the end of his three-year term of office.

The office of Vice-Principal (Academic) was established in 1966 by then-Principal Dr. J. A. Corry, to undertake special assignments connected with the reorganization of the Senate, the review of the system of university government, and academic planning. The increase in size and complexity of the University now requires that the Vice-Principal (Academic) take on certain operational responsibilities, among which will be several important university-wide academic services.

Prior to Dr. Harrower's appointment as Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Science he served as Assistant Dean from 1962 to 1964, and was as well Associate Professor of Physics, teaching in both the Faculty of Arts and Science and the Faculty of Applied Science.

A native of Flesherton, Ont., Dr. Harrower obtained his high school education in Englehart, Ont., and took undergraduate studies in mathematics and physics at the University of Western Ontario. He graduated in 1949, with a B.Sc., and the gold medal in physics. His postgraduate work was done at McGill University, where he was awarded a M.Sc. degree and, in 1952, the degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

From 1952 until his appointment to Queen's in 1955, Dr. Harrower was with the staff of the Bell Telephone Laboratories in Murray Hill, New Jersey.

Coastal Studies Laboratory Set Up

The coastal studies laboratory, housed for several years in old H.M.C.S. Cataraqui, now has a building of its own, on the West Campus. It looks more like a warehouse than a university building — aluminum, windowless, concrete block — but it serves a very important purpose in the study of waves.

Dr. J. William Kampuis, a coastal engineer who recently joined the staff at Queen's, helps oversee the work program. He works with the head of the Civil Engineering Department, Dr. Arthur Brebner, also a coastal engineer.

Students studying for master's and doctoral degrees carry out experiments on wave energy and the effect of wave forces with the aid of sensitive measuring devices and machines which can artificially create waves in any desirable pattern. One of the experiments underway is

To Purchase Electron Microscope

The National Research Council has made a joint award to the Centre for Mineral Technology and the Department of Metallurgical Engineering of $50,000 for the purchase of an electron microscope. The University has made an additional grant up to $17,250 to support the purchase.

The acquisition of this instrument will provide the University with the versatile instrument available for this type of work in Southern Ontario. It will allow the extension of the research work of the Centre and the Department into areas which have hitherto been unavailable because of the lack of an electron microscope facility.

a study in one of the long water troughs to determine how friction from the sides and bottom reduces the energy of the wave. Another more dramatic experiment in the same flume involves a box to which weights can be added and an inclined rack of rollers, the same kind used in beer stores. The box of weights is placed on the rollers, and sent into the water trough. This is actually a controlled duplication of a real problem that exists for hydro engineers, namely, that of landslides into dam reservoirs.

Dinner Honours Senior Staff

A testimonial dinner to honour those who have served Queen's University for twenty-five years or more was held by the University in the Students Memorial Union in April. There were twenty-three with forty or more years of service, and seventy-seven with twenty-five or more years of service.

The Principal, Dr. J. J. Deutsch, served as chairman, and expressed warm appreciation for the support of so many long-service personnel. A toast to the University was proposed by Dr. W. A. Mackintosh, and response was made by Dr. H. W. Curran. An award of pins was made to those who had been on the staff for twenty-five years, and engraved silver trays to those with forty years' experience.

TO OFFER NIGHT COURSES

Queen's Summer School will offer night courses this summer, for the first time since the School was established in 1910. The night school, from July 2 to August 16, will include introductory courses in business and child psychology.

Appointed Medical Co-ordinator

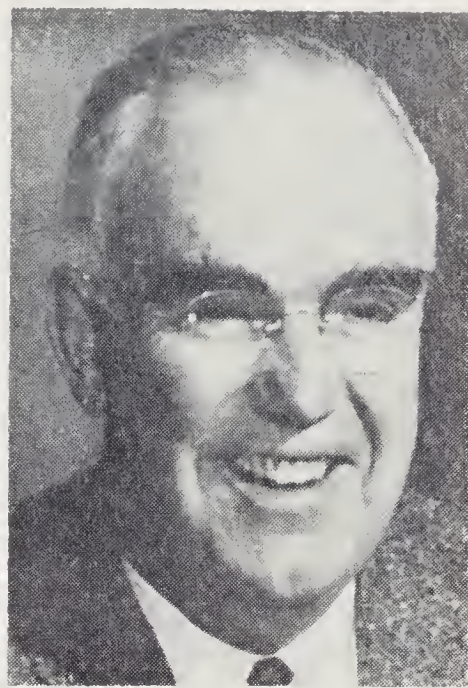

Dr. S. L. Vandewater has been appointed Medical Co-ordinator for the Queen's - Kingston General Hospital Health Sciences Complex. J. D. Gibson

Elected Chairman Of The Board

J. Douglas Gibson of Toronto, a member of the Board of Trustees since 1964 and vice-chairman for the past two years, has been elected chairman of the Board. Mr. Gibson succeeds Col. R. D. Harkness, who had served for the last six years and who had indicated that he did not wish to stand for re-election. Colonel Harkness will continue as a Trustee, representing the Benefactors.

Chosen as vice-chairman were former Principal Dr. W. A. Mackintosh (re-elected), and R. W. Southam of Ottawa.

The new Board chairman is a native of Toronto, and a graduate in political science and economics of the University of Toronto. Mr. Gibson is a financial and economic consultant, and visiting professor at York University. He is a former deputy chairman and executive vice-chairman of the Bank of Nova Scotia, with which he was associated from 1931 to 1965.

Plans for $2.8 million co-operative student residence on Princess St. are now completed and construction may begin as early as this fall, with completion by September, 1970. The complex will be under a student board of directors and will be operated by a full-time staff. The uniquely designed residence will encourage a community atmosphere among the 420 students. Ross McGregor, president of the student body, says that the project has reached this stage only through the co-operation of the University, city, students, and C.H.M.C.

Explore New University Centre

The Board of Trustees has given approval to an exploration of the feasibility of building a new University Centre.

Plans for the Centre, which could cost several million dollars, were outlined for the Trustees by Ted Parnell, chairman of an Alma Mater Society committee which has been working on the project for the last three months. He said the committee hopes to have views by summer as to what facilities might go into the Centre, as well as proposals on how it might be financed. The committee hopes "to draw as much as possible on outside funds."

Principal Dr. John J. Deutsch told the Trustees: "Our facilities in this area are inadequate, and will become much more so as the University grows. There are also additional services which we should have on campus. The project will deserve widespread support from the entire Queen's community."

PROPOSES REORGANIZATION

● Appointment of a director of alumni affairs, a field secretary, and an Alumni Fund director were agreed upon at the spring meeting of the Board of Directors of the Alumni Association.

A committee, headed by George E. Perrin and composed of Dr. G. L. Liberty, Lou Bruce, George Toller, and John Oliver, submitted a report containing these and other recommendations. Acceptance of the report, in principle, means that the first step is ready to be taken in the organization of the Alumni Association to meet the challenges of a rapidly expanding constituency. The report also recommended the appointment of an editor for the Review and a director of alumni records.

An executive committee was appointed to act for the Directors on urgent business arising between Board meetings and, specifically, to hire the proposed field secretary and Alumni Fund director. This committee consists of the President, the First and Second Vice-presidents, the three immediate Past Presidents, and the President of the Alumnae Association, with power to add.

Miss Evelina Thompson, president of the Alumni Association, and chairman of the meeting, reported on behalf of the steering committee of the commission to study the structures, organization, aims, and purposes of the Association. Two conferences had been held: one in Kingston for the representatives of all the branches, and one in Calgary, for the representatives of the branches in Western Canada. Study areas had been assigned as follows: Alumni Office Administration—George E. Perrin; Branches—Metropolitan, Bruce Alexander; Western Canada, Mrs. W. G. Wegenast; Smaller Branches, W. D. Sproule; United States, Dr. G. B. Robinson; Review—H. J. Hamilton; Alumni Fund—W. G. Cunningham; Alumni-Students Relationships—G. G. McNeely; Alumni Relationships with the University—H. I. Marshall; Reunions—Miss Diana Blake; Queen's Tradition—R. M. Bassett. The assistance of the branches is to be solicited in the survey, and it is hoped that the alumni at large will volunteer appraisals of the Alumni program as it is and as it might become.

A trio of student spokesmen addressed the meeting. Andy Pipe, Alma Mater Society representative for student-alumni relationships, outlined plans for closer liaison between the A.M.S. and the alumni, including student participation in reunion weekend programs, and student speakers at branch meetings. Dan Burns, A.M.S. representative on student housing, outlined plans for an ambitious student co-operative housing project. Ted Parnell, head of the committee for a new university centre, described plans for this project which he hoped might be included as an objective for the Alumni Fund. Support in principle was given by the Board to the centre, and interest was shown in the suggestion that Alumni quarters might be provided in the building.

DONALD GORDON

The Queen's Board of Trustees has expressed regret on the death of Donald Gordon, one of its highly esteemed members. Mr. Gordon had been a member of the Queen's Board since 1951, and a member of its Executive Committee since 1964.

His first contact with Queen's had been through extramural courses, as a result of which he was awarded a Fellowship in the Canadian Bankers' Association. Since that time he had maintained a deep interest in and affection for the university. In recognition of his outstanding service as Chairman of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, Queen's made him an honorary LL.D. in 1947. He had served in a wide variety of posts within industry and the public service of Canada.

Principal John J. Deutsch said: "In the death of Donald Gordon, Canada has lost one of its most outstanding servants, and Queen's a very devoted friend. He served the Board of Trustees for eighteen years, and was very generous in his help to the University, both in dealing with its problems and in expanding the resources available to it, having played an important part in the last capital fund campaign.

"His death was a personal loss for me because it was my privilege to work under him in my first position after graduation, and later to work with him on many occasions on matters concerning the public service of Canada. I have first-hand knowledge of the remarkable contributions he has made to Canadian affairs over the past several decades."

Major Malcolm Bruce MacLachlan, B.A. '15, retired, Vancouver, B.C., May 9. Dr. David MacLachlan, Med. '55, is a son, and Grant MacLachlan, Sc. '22, and Ian MacLachlan, Sc. '25, Arts '26, are brothers.

Miss Helen C. Miller, B.A. '25, M.A. '26, Cobourg, Ont., January 30.

Mrs. Samuel Quigg (Eva May York), Ottawa, Ont., March 31.

Miss Bertha Ranson, B.A. '29, Prescott, Ont., high school teacher, September 24, 1968.

Emmett Carson Reid, B.A. '25, Fort Erie, Ont., April 21, 1968.

James Sanders, B.A. '43, M.A. '50, Department of Mathematics, University of Alberta, Edmonton, Alta., May 16.

Dana C. Scafe, Arts '20, retired from Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, Ont., March 3.

Where Do We Go From Here?

The Golden Gaels won the Canadian college football championship last year but the experts anticipate a rocky road to a repeat performance in 1969

● Top Canadian college team in 1968, the Golden Gaels will be hard pressed to maintain the status quo.

Last year's effort produced a shelf full of trophies including the Yates Cup, emblematic of the Ontario-Quebec championship; the Western Bowl, which Queen's won over Manitoba; and the Vanier Cup, now symbolic of the Canadian championship, which the Gaels won over Waterloo Lutheran. Nothing would please the Gaels and their supporters more than to repeat that performance, but the word is: Don't sell the house and bet the proceeds on that outcome.

From last year's championship squad the following are gone, but not forgotten: Don Bayne, Ron Brooks, Theron Craig, Steve Davis, John Gordon, Terry Haggerty, Kees Kort, George McKenzie, Mike Nihmey, Glen Penwarden, Derek Orr, John Stirling, and Brian Donnelly. In the doubtful category is Joel Anderson.

These men leave some big holes in the offensive and defensive units, but the greatest loss has to be Don Bayne, the All-Star quarterback and Most Valuable Player of the College Bowl game. Don will be playing for the London Lords this year. To fill his shoes there are Bill McNeill, back-up quarterback for the past two years, and a good one, and Terry Macauley and Doug Cozac, who show a lot of promise.

Head Football Coach Frank Tindall and assistants Hal McCarney, Al Lenard and Wally Mellor will field a strong team, no doubt about that, but whether they can prevail against the likes of Toronto, Western, and McGill, to say nothing of those newcomers to the league — McMaster and Waterloo — calls for greater prognostic skills than are available at time of writing.

Some of the returnees have been working out this summer with Carl Giacomini's football clinic which he has been operating in Kingston for high school players and which has proven to be a great success. If it never accomplishes anything else it should be an important factor in improved town-gown relations. Carl, who will be teaching in a Kingston high school, hopes that the clinic will become a permanent institution.

1913 - 1969

by W. H. EVANS

THE University community was saddened by the sudden death of Dr. Glen Shortliffe, Professor of French, on Sunday, June 22, 1969, on his fifty-sixth birthday.

Glen Shortliffe was a Westerner. Born in Stonewall, Manitoba, he went to school and university in Edmonton, graduating with a B.A. and an M.A. from the University of Alberta, his M.A. thesis being entitled Les idées des philosophes dans les contes de Voltaire. He spent the year 1935-1936 at the Sorbonne on a French Government Scholarship and then entered Cornell University to undertake graduate work. He received his Ph.D. for a thesis on Le roman social avant le naturalisme and was elected to no fewer than three honorary graduate fraternities. Glen Shortliffe might have made his career in the United States but it was due to Principal R. C. Wallace who had known him at Alberta that he came back to Canada and to Queen's where he taught for thirty years.

Glen Shortliffe entered the French Department at Queen's in September 1939 and found himself the very junior member of a department which consisted of three very senior professors, P. G. C. Campbell, W. M. Conacher and Marcel Tirol. Shortliffe soon made his mark as a teacher and a scholar. His academic interests in the early part of his career were in nineteenth-century French literature and in the practical aspects of modern language teaching. His Review of Standard French (1954, prepared in collaboration with E. Sonet) is still widely used both in Canada and in the United States and well known to generations of Queen's students who struggled to obtain the language requirement for the General B.A.

Glen Shortliffe was a man of great and enduring enthusiasm. He early saw the possibilities offered by the newly invented tape recorder and from small beginnings built up a language laboratory and built it literally, constructing the booths and wiring the whole system himself. He saw innumerable possibilities in the new methods of language teaching and invented simple but effective gadgets to make his use of audio-visual aids more forceful still.

Throughout his career Glen Shortliffe thought of himself as a teacher first, but it would be impossible to say whether he was at his best with his freshman class or in his second-year survey course where students were likely to find out what higher education was all about, or in his graduate seminar on Victor Hugo's Political Ideas or directing graduate theses. In all ways he served the French Department well, as he also served the Faculty of Arts and Science and the University at large. For a time Shortliffe was Editor of the Queen's Quarterly and also Director of the Summer School of English and it was through L'Ecole d'Anglais that he seems to have discovered French Canada. He placed his energy and enthusiasm at the service of French and English understanding; he caught the "disease of translation" (a title he gave to an article which was published in the spring of this year) and became the interpreter of French-Canadian writing to English-Canadians. As the translator of his friend and colleague, Gérard Bessette, he produced Not For Every Eye and Incubation which are models of their kind. One critic wrote in a review of the latter novel that "it had been rendered into English not so much by a proficient translator, as by a highly gifted writer", and Glen Shortliffe's merit as a writer was recognized by his appointment to the Selection Jury (Novel Section) of the Greater Montreal Arts Council.

Outside the University Glen Shortliffe was known not only as an outstanding academic but as a broadcaster. He had been a commentator for the C.B.C. Weekend Review on International Affairs and later found another medium well-suited to his temperament and talents in television.

Glen Shortliffe was an excellent colleague: he was known and liked throughout the University by staff and students alike. His ready wit would enliven Faculty meetings and stir up the sluggish student. He liked best of all to take coffee in the Dunning Hall common room and exchange banter with his economist or political scientist colleagues. Once, when challenged that he didn't know the difference between a recession and a depression, he retorted: "When I lose my job, that is a depression. When you lose your job, that is a recession." Glen Shortliffe was a product of the depression, of the '30's, and that in part explains his interest in the welfare of his fellow man, in politics, in economics, in civil liberties, in Canadian unity. His interests were wide-ranging, his knowledge of his academic field profound. He enjoyed the arts, especially Italian opera, he read everything that came to his hand, he was a practical man; a humanist with a great curiosity about the sciences, he was the "uomo universale". As one of his own professors wrote of him: "Glen Shortliffe had a vigorous independent mind united with a wonderfully warm heart." His death is a great loss for his University and for the larger community of Kingston and Canada.

Times They Are A-Changing!

by MEL SWAIN

● While watching some youngsters toss a football around one hot afternoon in July, it occurred to me that Queen's Golden Gaels would be starting another season in two months' time.

Will I make my annual trek to Kingston again this fall? You bet I will, despite last year's traumatic experience.

May I recount to you my tale of woe?

Having left the hallowed limestone campus in '62, I thought I might once more recapture a bit of my mad youth as a Queen's man. My objective was simple: Hop in my car and drive 300 miles to see Queen's play Waterloo in Richardson Stadium on October 19, 1968.

It didn't take much to talk my roommate, a recent U.B.C. graduate, into accompanying me on a "guaranteed good time." Besides, he is 6'6" and 235 pounds and would prove to be a real asset if called upon to defend the goalposts.

We picked up another pal in Toronto, a U.N.B. graduate, and with this cross-section of past campus life we proceeded on to Kingston. It rained every inch of the way!

However, the weather was no deterrent because we were heading for one helluva good blast at my old Alma Mater. Our thoughts were of friendly girls, good football, lots of suds, loud songs, and one or two "wild Queen's parties," which I'm sure my two buddies envisioned taking place in every other house around the campus.

Arriving in Kingston at 12:30 Saturday afternoon, I pointed the car towards the best draught house in town. My two friends were most impressed with the Royal and the waiters once again proved the hand is faster than the eye.

Admittedly, we stood out in our varied college jackets and drinking hats, since there were no other college types to be seen. I consoled my companions by assuring them that the students were probably holding their warm-ups at Beaup's, the Manor, or in private.

The draughts flowed and after several drinking games we decided to go up to the game about half-time because one can get in free then and, besides, Waterloo was considered no competition for the Gaels.

At 3 p.m. it was suggested we stay on and merely ask the final score when the victory parade passed the Royal's front entrance. However, logic prevailed and we poured into the car and off to the game!

Again my pals were impressed with the thorough frisking we encountered at the Stadium gate. "This must be the place," gurgled my happy Maritime friend.

I convinced the pretty blonde to frisk me rather than have her male counterpart do it. This she did so willingly that I attempted to make it mutual, but got a quick officious frown to replace a previous smile.

Well, we stood on the sidelines and hung on to the hemp for the last half of the game. When the game was over, it was apparent that no one was needed to defend the goalposts. I missed this particular exercise, but shrugged it off and struck out for Grant Hall before they could set up facilities to charge admission for the dance.

There were only five students in the hall, along with a band, when we stumbled in. I asked a girl who was sitting on the stage what was the name of the rock band. She misinterpreted my approach and left immediately, much to the amusement of my two buddies.

Obviously we were too early so I said, "Follow me, men, we're off to a Co-op." After walking almost three blocks, we passed the new wing of K.C.V.I. and my heart sank. Collins House, my dear home away from home, had vanished. A vacant lot sat unmajestically on the site where life itself once thrived.

After tolerating such biting comments as "Are you sure you ever went to Queen's," etc., from my impatient companions, I was in a state of shock. Things went down hill from that point. We doubled back to Grant Hall and were clipped 50 cents each to get into the dance. The crowd was very sparse, with only a couple of extra girls around. Another girl wandered in and I asked her for a dance. She said no thanks and walked about twenty feet away. A red-haired, freckled kid then asked her and she accepted!

It was hard to convince my skeptical buddies that I had often seen Grant Hall so packed after a game that you had to push your way through hundreds of students. And my getting shot down by that girl didn't help me save face either. It would be wasting words to try to tell them I had dated many a girl I had met in Grant Hall over my five years at Queen's. I might add here that we were not "old men" in appearance — a waiter had even asked us for proof of age that day.

Off we went to the Manor. Gee, 15¢ draught! Things were picking up. And there were students about. However, comments like "There's the jolly green giant" directed toward my U.B.C. pal and "Who's the potato picker?" for the benefit of my Maritime friend with the U.N.B. jacket, didn't leave us too impressed.

Next, a couple of draughts downtown at the Wagon Wheel and then to the Shamrock. What's this? A topless dancer in old conservative Kingston! Then go-go dancers in dazzling orange micro-minis at the Ship. This was progress!

A last half-successful attempt at buying some girls a drink, then hotel-bound. But not before we "borrowed" a beautiful apple pie from one of the pub's kitchens. This coup led to leap-frogging parking meters for a block. This had such a sobering effect that we topped the night off with questionable Chinese food.

All in all we had a lot of fun those twenty-four hours in Kingston. Sure, I'll be going again this fall, but, on my oath, the times they are a-changing!

UNDERGROUND PRESS

AN underground press at Queen's? Not really. But Professor W. C. Ferguson, left, does operate this old Chicago press literally underground in the basement of John Watson Hall. He also teaches English 800, a postgraduate course in bibliography which involves students in a minimum of six hours typesetting by hand. Sarah Tracy is shown above putting type by hand on a compositor's stick.

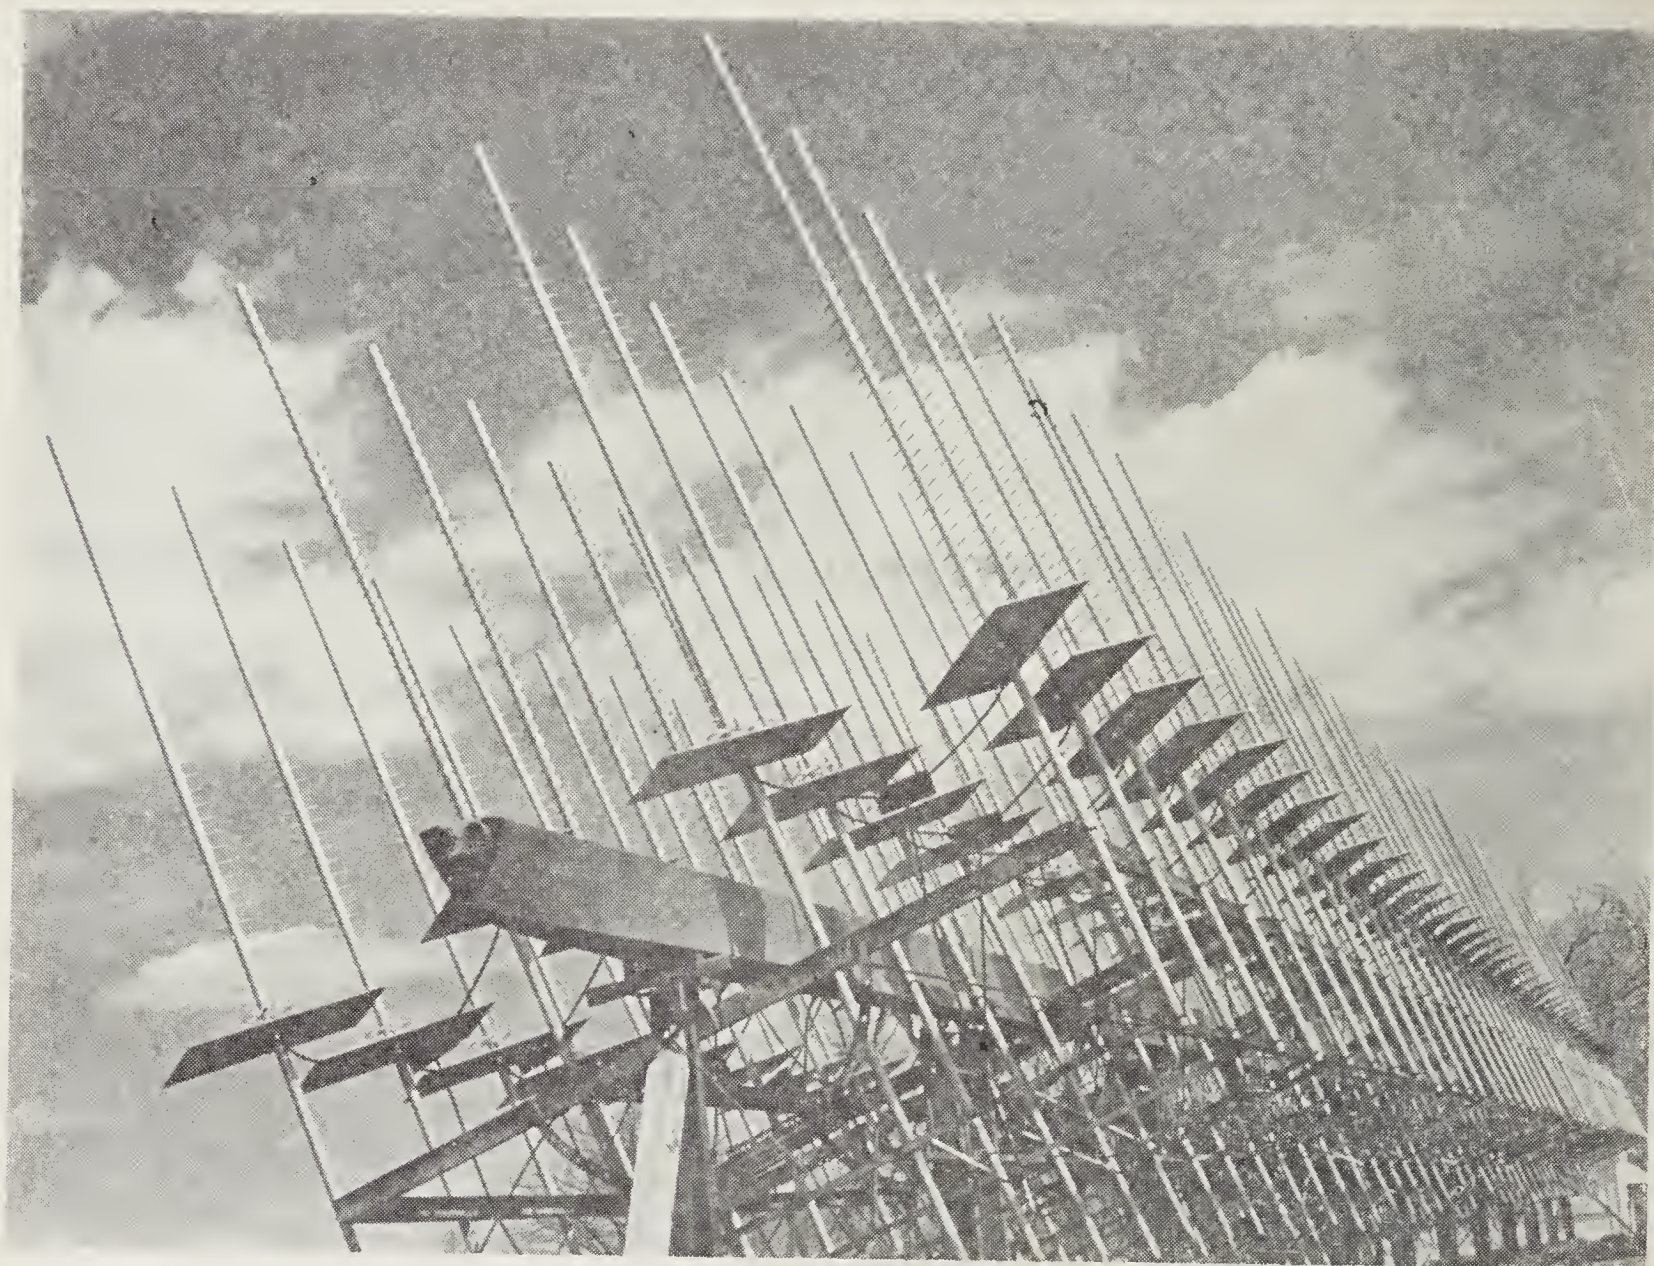

The idea of actually having students work on a 19th century-style press to give them the feel of what book production was like in the old days was the brainchild of D. A. Redmond, chief librarian, and Assistant Professor W. C. Ferguson of the Department of English. Dr. Ferguson, got the press installed behind a protective screen in the basement of John Watson Hall, the new humanities building. He put the press in working order and organized type storage and other facilities.

The vintage press, previously in use as a proof press by the Kingston Whig-Standard, was donated to the English department by the newspaper. The machine, tradenamed "Twentieth Century Reliance," was built in Chicago around the turn of the century.

After the press had been acquired, Sears Limited of Toronto donated a paper cutter of similar vintage, and several more well-wishers provided a variety of appropriate 19th century type faces.

Students in English 800 now not only set type by hand, but carry out other processes of book production, including binding. The first fruits was the production of a collection of poetry by Queen's librarian Stuart Mackinnon.

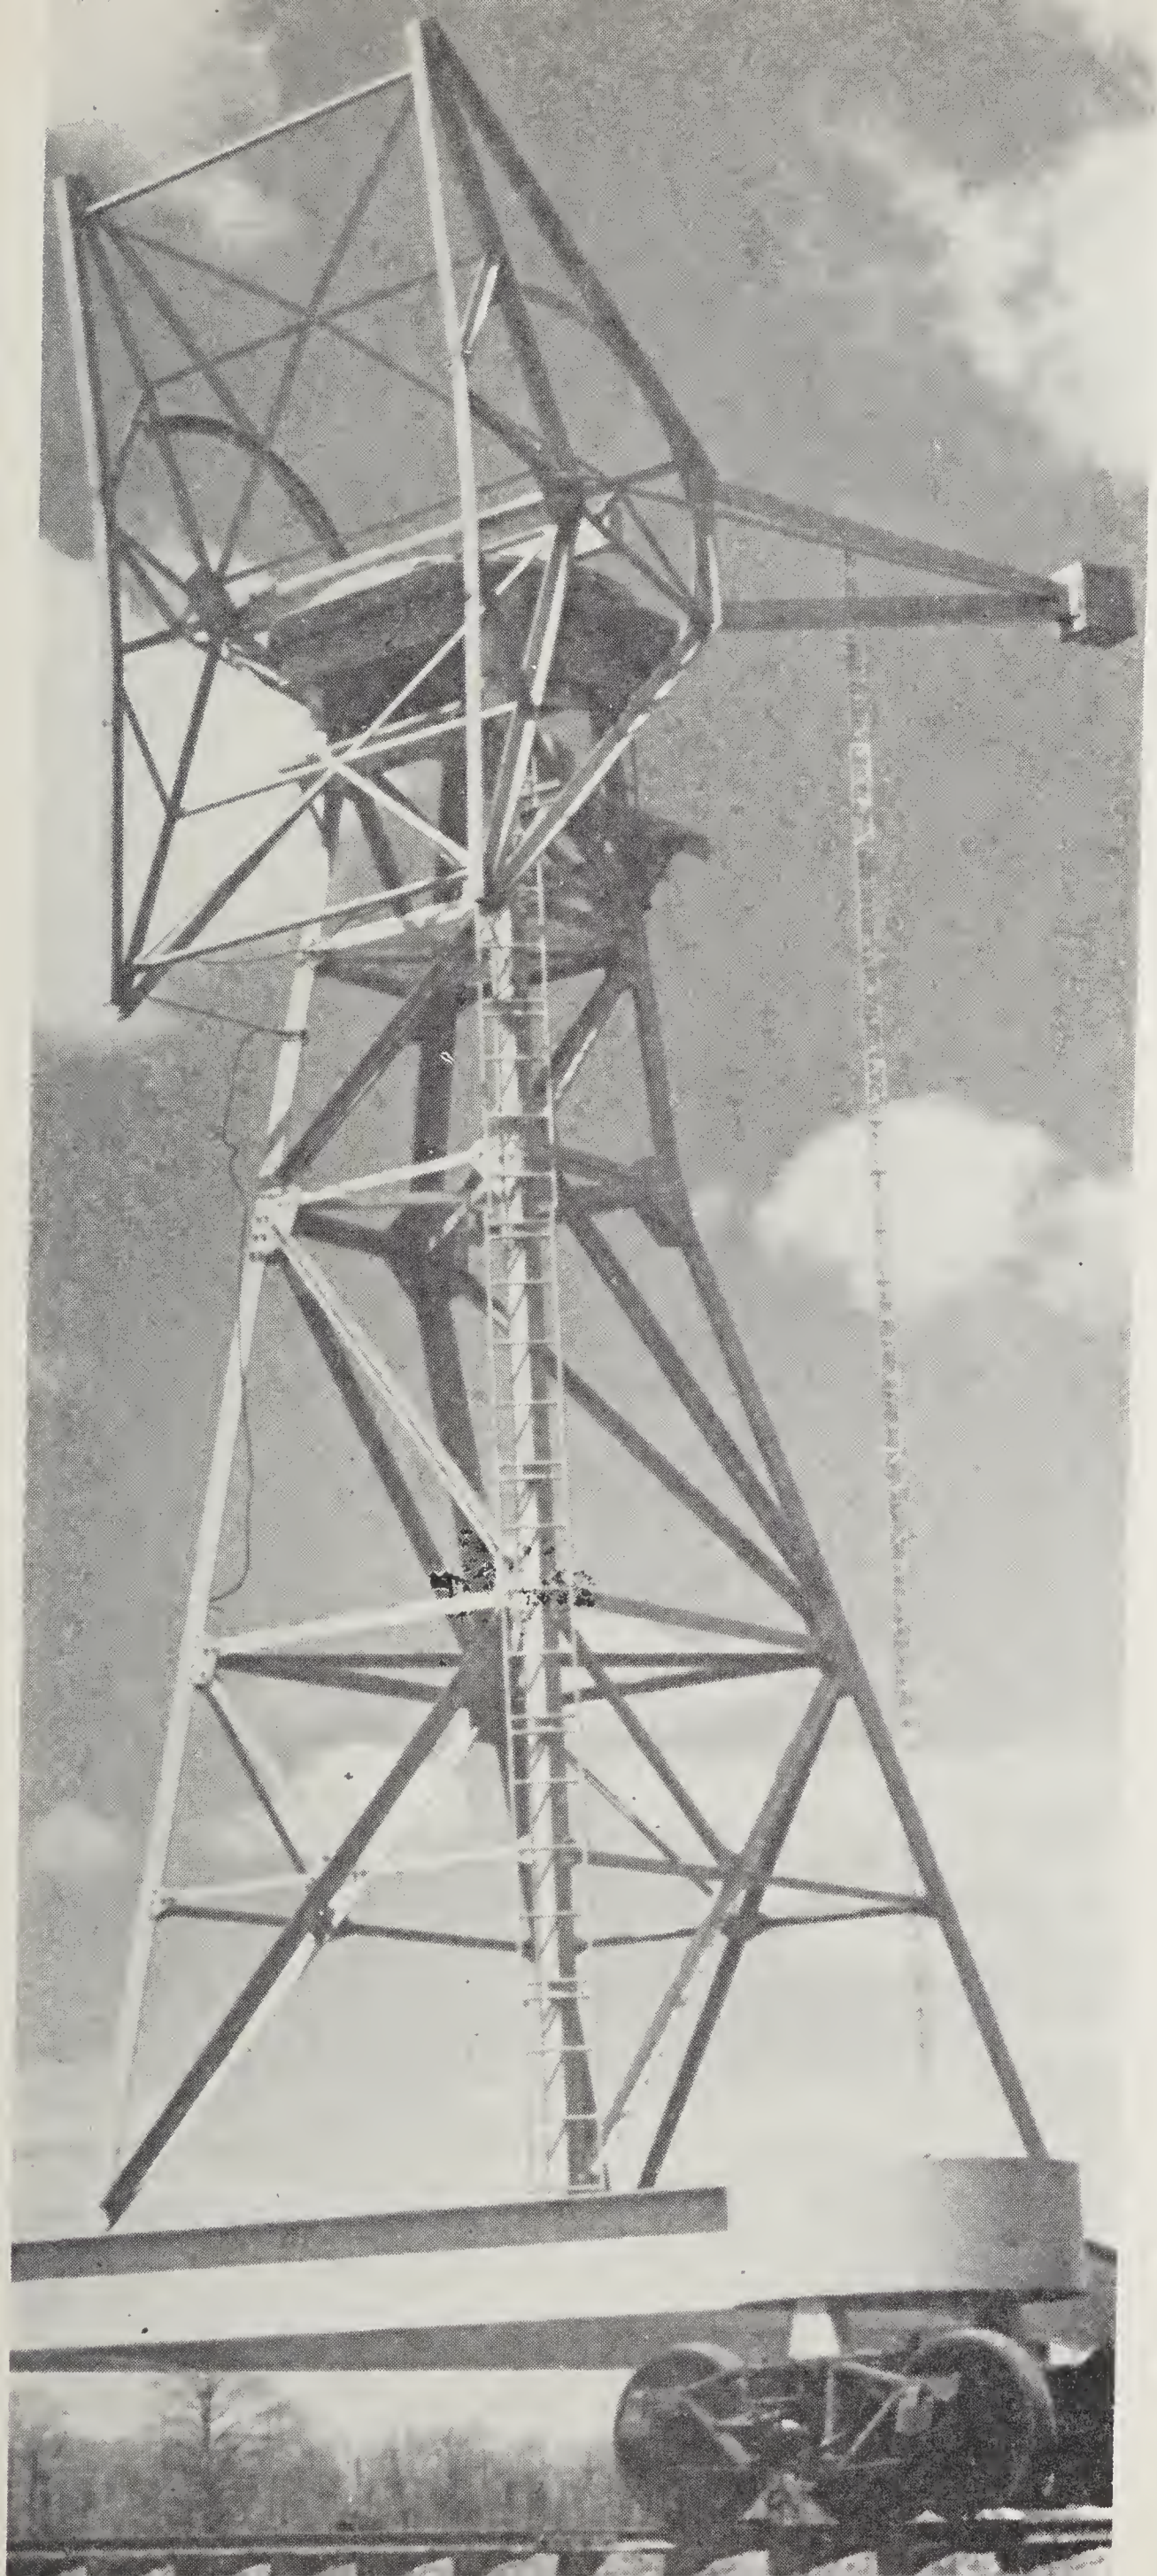

AD ASTRA

QUEEN'S is the only Canadian university with its own radio telescope near the campus. Two antennas — a 100-foot array, above, and a 60-foot dish, the pedestal for which is shown right, have been installed in a field about eight miles from the campus. They are designed to help the radio astronomy group determine the detailed structure of the magnetic field in the Milky Way.

The Queen's group is headed by Professor V. A. Hughes, and previously used the National Research Council radio telescope at Algonquin Park and some small facilities of its own at Kingston. It also studied bursts of radiation from the sun with the aid of the Alouette satellite.

Queen's radio astronomy group is believed to be the largest in a Canadian university.

JOHN HOWARD SISSONS

Mr. Justice John Howard Sissons, B.A. '17, who cast himself in the role of protector for Indians and Eskimos in the north and became a legend in his own time, died at Edmonton, Alberta, July 12. He retired in 1966 as the first judge of the Northwest Territories Court. The former Liberal M.P. for Peace River from 1940 to 1945 was appointed to the territorial court in 1955.

One of his most celebrated cases followed an Ottawa decision that all Eskimo marriages were null and void. "No bastard in Ottawa is going to tell me my 10,000 Eskimos are all bastards," he was quoted as saying. Ultimately the Eskimo ceremony of marriage was found as binding and valid as any in the world.

Mr. Sisson described himself as "rough, tough, crusty, and unorthodox." His decisions often set himself between Eskimos and the federal government. They earned him high esteem from the Eskimos and the nickname, Ekoktoegee, the one who listens.

"The white man never listens to the Eskimo," one Eskimo said. "He always tells the Eskimo. But the judge is different."

Mr. Justice Sissons travelled by aircraft, dog team, and boat to hold court in almost any kind of shelter — an R.C.M.P. outpost kitchen, an igloo, airplane, priest's manse, or warehouse.

He understood that "guilty" or "not guilty" had no equivalent in the Eskimo language, so if there was any hesitation by an accused he would record a plea of not guilty and proceed with a trial.

In his memoirs he said of Eskimos, "They have much to offer Canada, but up to now Canada has not offered much to them."

A tribute to him in the "Globe and Mail" said, in part: "For eleven years before he retired in July, 1966, he hobbled across the white conscience of this nation and across the pages of its law books, leaving a legacy that will never be forgotten."

Through a period of twenty years her imaginative explorations of materials relating to the Burney family have constructed an intricate literary empire of which she is the sole governor. This empire she controls with a penetrating knowledge of its history, its customs, and its generations of inhabitants. Steadfast, devoted, lucid, through her Catalogue and Index she invites our entrance into her domain."

T. D. CONNOCHIE

Widely experienced film and television director-writer-producer whose name has been in the credits on much motion picture and TV feature production, T. D. (Tom) Connochie, Arts '35, is the author of the first fully complete and up-to-date manual on closed circuit TV: "TV in Education and Industry," published by Mitchell Press Ltd., Vancouver, B.C. It is a comprehensive report on a fast-changing science of instruction and monitoring.

While still an undergraduate at Queen's, Mr. Connochie visited England and accepted a position as studio assistant at Gaumont in London. When he was handed a film assignment in India, on the Houston-Mount Everest Expedition feature-documentary for Gaumont and Gainsborough Pictures, he was, without premeditation, launched on a career in films and later television. There followed a series of location film adventures in Africa, the Khyber Pass, Australia, and Austria. He also worked with Alfred Hitchcock and Carol Reid in London.

In World War Two for over two years he commanded an R.A.F. newsreel group in India, Burma, and the Far East, then later was associate producer with the late Sir Alexander Korda.

He was supervising producer for Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., in his first television series and with the Danziger Group. His favorite assignment was on the Hans Christian Andersen television as writer-director in Stockholm, Sweden.

Returning to Canada in 1957, he was a free-lance producer-director with C.B.C. for nine years. During that time he produced the television series "Web of Life" and, with Dr. Ian McTaggart-Cowan, "Patterns of Living" for Canadian National Schools and gained several international awards. In 1966 he won the international film award "Golden Pharoah" for the best educational film produced.

10,000 ENROLMENT PROJECTED

Senate Committee on Academic Development outlines academic growth and development for the period 1975-76 and predicts total number of students will reach 10,000 and remain relatively stable for years after

The Senate Committee on Academic Development has presented a 37-page report to the Senate outlining academic growth and development for the period of 1975-76.

The report states that "much of the substance of this report has been derived from discussion which members of the Committee have had in a series of separate meetings with almost all of the teaching departments of the university. (The only major area not yet covered is clinical medicine.) In the course of this department self-review, more than 175 members of faculty have so far been involved. The average length of discussion has been two and one-half hours and we are confident that whatever other results may emerge, the discussions themselves have been useful in familiarizing a substantial number of university faculty with the aims and objectives of the Senate Committee." Recommendations:

* * *

That, for the present, projections of enrolment be based on the assumption that the total number of students will reach a figure from 10,000 to 10,200 in 1975/76 and remain relatively stable for the years following and that

- a) for planning purposes numbers shown in the projection tables (not rounded) be used
- b) beginning in 1970/71 annual projections should be revised and extended to cover the period five years ahead and that
- c) beginning in 1970/71 the five-year projections should include part-time graduate students, extramural and summer school enrolments.

That all academic decision-making bodies in the University be asked to make vigorous efforts to develop soundly based interdisciplinary programs of instruction and research. In order to assist these efforts we recommend further

- a) that appropriate officers of the University be asked to consider modifications in present administration arrangements with a view to encouraging interdepartmental co-operation and to consider also the possibility of establishing small development grants for the purpose of easing strains on normal departmental resources in the initial phases of interdisciplinary projects.
- b) that the Senate Committee on Appointment, Promotion, Tenure and Leave be asked to consider procedures to safeguard the professional standing within the University of members of faculty who accept cross-appointments on a temporary or permanent basis or who otherwise engage in interdisciplinary activities.
- c) that the Senate Committee on Academic Development be informed of interdisciplinary projects at their inception and also receive evaluations of such projects at appropriate intervals.

* * *

That provisions for "service teaching" of basic disciplines be studied further by an appropriately designed sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Academic Development and that specifically such a sub-committee be instructed to study, in the first instance, the teaching of statistics at Queen's and bring forward recommendations respecting this matter to the Senate.

* * *

That the Vice-Principal Academic and the Dean of Graduate Studies jointly explore:

- a) the possibility of bringing together units of substantial specialized equipment and related operating personnel to provide more comprehensive facilities for teaching and research in particular specialized fields than are now available to individual departments and
- b) explore the possibility of combining the needs of several departments in making submissions for major equipment grants to the granting bodies and presenting the case to these agencies for the sympathetic consideration of such grants although they may represent a departure from accepted practice.

and report on these matters to the Senate.

* * *

That the Research Committee of the Senate and the Council of the School of Graduate Studies undertake a major continuing effort to anticipate developments in the policies of external granting agencies and communicate these to the Senate Committee on Academic Development.

* * *

That the Council of the School of Graduate Studies be asked to undertake a systematic review and internal appraisal of existing graduate programs and the resources supporting them, and make recommendations concerning priorities in the future development of graduate work at Queen's for the guidance of the Senate Committee on Academic Development and the Senate. That heads of academic departments and chairmen of graduate studies within departments at Queen's exert positive leadership within their respective Ontario university discipline groups with a view to achieving genuine co-operation and optimum use of provincial resources in graduate work and research.

* * *

That the Council of the School of Graduate Studies, each division of the School, and each department offering graduate work be asked to concert their efforts to have students complete academic requirements for degrees as soon as possible after minimum residence requirements have been met.

That, as soon as the Sub-Committee on Extension Work of the Senate Committee on Academic Development has reported, an appropriate university-wide group (perhaps a joint sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Appointment, Promotion, Tenure and Leave and the Senate Committee on Academic Development) be asked to make recommendations which will define the total teaching and graduate supervisory responsibilities of faculty on a year-round basis.

CONDUCT GOVERNMENT STUDY

A two-year study by a Queen's Department into federal-provincial liaison on fiscal and economic matters has recommended a series of new committees and organizations to help bridge activities between the two levels of government. The study was commissioned by the federal finance department and carried out by the Institute of Intergovernmental Relations at Queen's.

Despite the new committees and organizations recommended, the federal-provincial conference headed by the Prime Minister and the ten provincial Premiers would continue to have the primary role in intergovernmental liaison, the study group said.

" . . . Our approach to the problems of liaison in fiscal and economic matters," said the study group, "is based on what seems to us to be realistic acceptance of the facts as they are and as they must be if we are to preserve the Canadian nation in recognizable form."

It said it believed this form to be "that of a strong central government working in tandem with strong regional governments in the growing place of the public sector in today's society."

$80 Million Allocation To Health Sciences

● After a nerve-racking period of uncertainty the proposed Health Sciences Centre has received a go-ahead signal with the tentative allocation of $80 million over a ten-year span.

The provincial government has completed a review of the whole matter of medical centres in Ontario and has now implemented a $600 million program for six medical sciences complexes. Last January it was announced that expansion plans for ten of the province's thirteen medical training centres, Kingston's among them, had to be postponed through a lack of funds.

The first money will probably be available at the beginning of 1970. One of the first projects will be an addition to the Connell Wing at Kingston General Hospital.

The Ontario Hospital Services Insurance Plan will make financing possible. The province is now responsible for medical manpower.

In making the announcement to Senate, the Principal, Dr. J. J. Deutsch, said that the Queen's University and Affiliated Hospitals Council was set up on an informal basis during the summer because a need for this sort of body was foreseen. Dr. Deutsch is chairman of the Council which includes three vice-principals from the University and leading officials from Kingston General, Hotel Dieu, St. Mary's of the Lake, and Kingston Psychiatric hospitals.

The Council has engaged an international firm of hospital and health science planners, Llewelyn-Davies, Weeks, Forestier-Walker and Bro. of London, England. In July the firm completed a study of the proposed complex and outlined a master plan which would avoid duplication of health services in the area in order to make the complex more attractive to provincial officials. The area bounded by the complex will be the central health facility for this region, which embraces Cornwall, Peterborough, and Port Hope.

All the health science centres are being asked to integrate health services activities for their regions, which are approximately those defined by the government for the purposes of regional government. The government is asking the centres involved for detailed plans for development of the health complexes, and will only look at proposals which are part of a co-ordinated scheme.

STUDENT HOUSING ADEQUATE

● Although enrolment at Queen's this fall showed an increase of upwards of 500, and although various residential housing units were not ready as scheduled, everyone managed to get bedded down and actually the Housing Office had some beds that went unclaimed.

The apartment, being built on the West Campus by the Ontario Student Housing Corporation for the use of married students presented the biggest problem. The original forecast completion date for the entire complex was August 18, 1969. Due to construction delays however, no apartments were ready until the first week in September when fourteen married students took occupancy. Even then heat, electric power for stoves and hot water were lacking and, as a consequence, Dr. Deutsch informed the student tenants that they would not be required to pay rent until these facilities were provided. By the end of the month the shortcomings referred to had been rectified and all but five of the one hundred one-bedroom apartments had been completed and occupied. By mid-October thirty-five two-bedroom apartments were occupied, but it now appears that it will be mid-November before the next group of forty-eight two-bedroom apartments are ready. The latest forecast as to when the final eighty two-bedroom apartments will be ready is mid-December. Married students who have signed leases and who are awaiting apartments are being provided with an alternative accommodation by the contractor at no expense to the students. Some of the apartments are being made available to single students.

There was also delay in the completion of 96 units for single undergraduates being built by the Ontario Student Housing Corporation on Earl St. The original completion date was September 1, 1969 for the entire building, but it was not until Sept. 6, 1969 that the first sixty students took occupancy. Here also there were many facilities lacking and, consequently, the Principal stipulated that students would not have to pay an accommodation fee until such time as the accommodation was acceptable. On Oct. 15, 1969 it was agreed that the entire building met minimum requirements and the remaining thirty-six students were allotted their rooms. While awaiting their accommodation these students were provided with alternative accommodation by the contractor in hotels and motels at no cost to the students.

While it can be seen from the above that there have been many problems occasioned by the late completion of these two projects, it is the consensus of opinion by occupants of both that, once the teething problems are over, both residences will provide excellent student accommodation.

The students are now operating co-operatives in twenty houses, which has helped to ease the housing problem. The Alma Mater Society co-operative residence planned for Princess St. received a setback when the government withheld its financial backing until certain conditions were met, but it is expected that the project will start before long.

Approximately 1200 men students and 1100 women students are in residence. The remainder of the student body is scattered around the city in private accommodation. Some who were not able to find rooms on first attempt have been put up in motels and hotels under an arrangement made by the University.

Merrill Denison Papers Acquired

During the past summer, the Douglas Library acquired the papers and library of a noted writer of Canadian history, Merrill Denison.

Since the bulk of the material is typescript or manuscript, the collection has been placed in the University Archives. Denison's substantial working library collection will be added to the Douglas Library. Arranging and boxing the Denison Papers, and the preparation of a preliminary inventory and other necessary finding aids, will be undertaken as rapidly as staff resources permit. The collection is expected to be of great interest to researchers in historical and literary fields.

Merrill Denison was born in Detroit, Michigan, in 1893, studied Architecture at the University of Toronto and the University of Pennsylvania, and undertook work at Columbia University and in Paris, France. He was a practising architect in Boston and an art director at the Hart House theatre in Toronto. From the early 1920's, however, writing replaced architecture and art as his chief interest.

A few of Denison's published works are: The Unheroic North; Books in the Woods; Advancing America; Klondike Mike; Canada, Our Dominion Neighbour; C.C.M., the First Fifty Years; The Barley and the Stream; Bristles and Brushes; The Power to Go; the History of the Automotive Industry in America; The People's Power; Harvest Triumphant; The History of the Bank of Montreal. In addition Denison wrote scores of plays, radio scripts, pamphlets and speeches.

The Denison Papers are of more than usual significance and importance to researchers in the humanities. The subjects are both extensive and varied. The material contains an unusually rich residue of research material used in the preparation of manuscripts dealing with economic and social history in Canada. This is particularly true of the sections dealing with the history of corporations.

The papers also contain the manuscripts of "Jack and Jill", the first soap opera broadcast in the United States and sponsored by Imperial Oil. The writings of Merrill Denison's first wife, Muriel, form a part of the collection. These manuscripts, Susanna, Susanna of the Mounties, Susanna in the Yukon, and Susanna Rides Again are in preliminary and final form. By 1959 the Susanna series had gone into 70 printings and had been translated into French, Finnish, Danish, Swedish and Dutch.

FILM DEPARTMENT HAS BEEN ESTABLISHED

A separate Department of Film has been established on an experimental basis for the next three years. It will function under the Faculty of Arts and Science.

Until now the course has been under the Department of English. This year there are 185 students registered in five film courses offered. At present there are just two film instructors at the University. One of them is Peter Harcourt, who was brought to Queen's especially for the purpose of teaching.

His research team includes two students. The group's aim is to "test bilinguals at different levels of ability to explore the relationship between proficiency and translation at greater depth."

NEW GYMNASIUM STARTED

Construction of the new physical education complex is well under way and the completion date is scheduled for June, 1970.

When the old Gymnasium opened in 1930 the facilities were considered comparable to the best in the country. This situation deteriorated over the years and of late the University has suffered because of the lack of adequate facilities. The need for replacement of the old arena, the tennis courts, and recently the pool, is finally being met. In the meantime, Queen's is indebted to the Royal Military College and to the community for their co-operation in making possible the continuance of the athletic program with a minimum of interruption.

The new complex will include a multi-purpose arena, complete with regulation hockey rink and quick ice-change, accommodation for about 2,000 spectators, and an indoor practice running track. Beneath the arena will be a parking area, and above it will be six regulation tennis courts.

Under the same roof will be two gymnasiums in addition to the completely refurbished present one; the new main gym is to include about 2,000 seats. A new pool will also be housed in this complex, including a moveable bulkhead to allow multiple use.

There will be handball and squash courts, a golf and archery range, along with excellent dressing-room facilities, equipment stores, training rooms, classrooms, exercise physiology laboratories, as well as appropriate lounges and staff offices.

The new facilities will make possible participation in several Intercollegiate sports additional to the seventeen in which Queen's already competes. Representation may be anticipated in volleyball, squash, and water polo, and Queen's will be in a position to act as host for any of the sports on the Canadian Intercollegiate scene.

Early Medical Text Donated to Library

Dr. Presley A. McLeod, a member of the Department of Obstetrics and Gynaecology from 1939 until his retirement in 1968, has donated an early medical text to the Health Sciences Library. The text will become part of the historical collection for the new library in the proposed Health Sciences Complex.

The book, Illustrations of the Great Operations of Surgery, by Sir Charles Bell, was published in 1821. It was given to Dr. McLeod some years ago by Dr. Lorimer John Austin, a distinguished member of the Queen's University Faculty of Medicine from 1920 until his death in 1945.

Sir Charles Bell, known in his own period as the leading British anatomist, has in the course of medical history become even better known as a neurologist and physiologist. Both Sir Charles Bell and his brother, John Bell, a famous surgeon, were artists. Many of the drawings in Illustrations of the Great Operations of Surgery are by Sir Charles Bell himself.

Dr. John Hall Archer, University archivist and associate professor, Department of History, has been appointed principal of the University of Saskatchewan, Regina Campus.

Dehumanizing fertility rites? Maybe. But the time-honoured candlelighting ceremony of the women students is still a part of tradition.

Candlelighting Ceremony

The Levana Society, for more than fifty years the student government for women students at Queen's, was abandoned a few years ago in favour of an Arts and Science Undergraduate Society for men and women, but one of its arcane rituals has survived — the candlelighting ceremony.

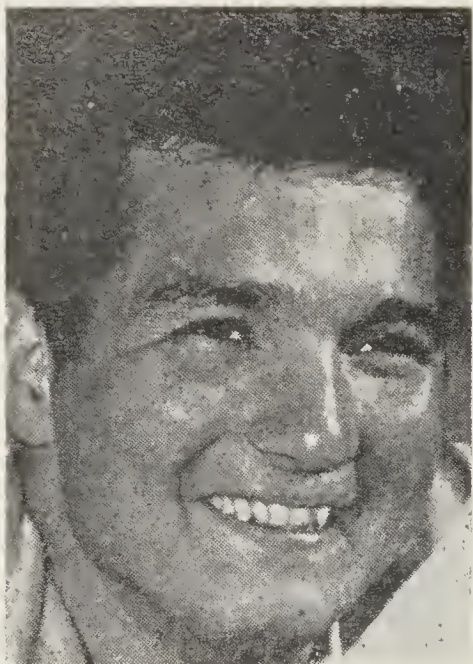

There is a strong tradition behind the rites. Chance decides whether the candle each girl receives is red, yellow, or blue. According to legend, the girl who gets a red candle will marry an Arts man; yellow, Science, and blue, Medical.

The number of drips on the candle foretells the number of children to be expected. On the eve of her wedding the girl should burn the candle before going to bed, thus ensuring happiness all her life.

The ceremony has thus far withstood the scepticism of sophisticated generations of students, although a few years ago it was somewhat adulterated by males dressed as nymphs who invaded the holy of holies.

Perhaps the greatest challenge of all was delivered this fall by two women members of the Alma Mater Society government who proposed a resolution condemning the Candlelighting Service "as a dehumanizing fertility rite which perpetuates the concept of university women as charming and cultured accessories who are being prepared for careers as wives and mothers of university men, without consideration of their development and value as human beings." The virtues of motherhood and femininity triumphed, however — the motion was defeated.

FOOTBALL CLUB FORMED

Heino Lilles

Forced out of football because of a recurring knee injury, Heino Lilles has been elected president of the newly formed Queen's Football Club. Heino, who starred as a halfback for six years, scored 108 points during his career, third on the all-time list behind Ron Stewart and Frank Leadlay.

The purpose of the club is twofold: (1) to promote football and athletics in the City of Kingston; (2) to protect athletic interests on the Queen's campus. Membership is open to three levels — University, high school, and general public.

Part of the first objective was the successful completion of the six-week High School Football Clinic held last summer. It is planned to make this a permanent feature. The Clinic was started and operated by Carl Giacomini.

The Club is promoting the new half-hour Frank Tindall Football Show which is shown over CKWS-TV every Saturday during the season. Future plans include a Quarterback Club and a football year book, among other projects.

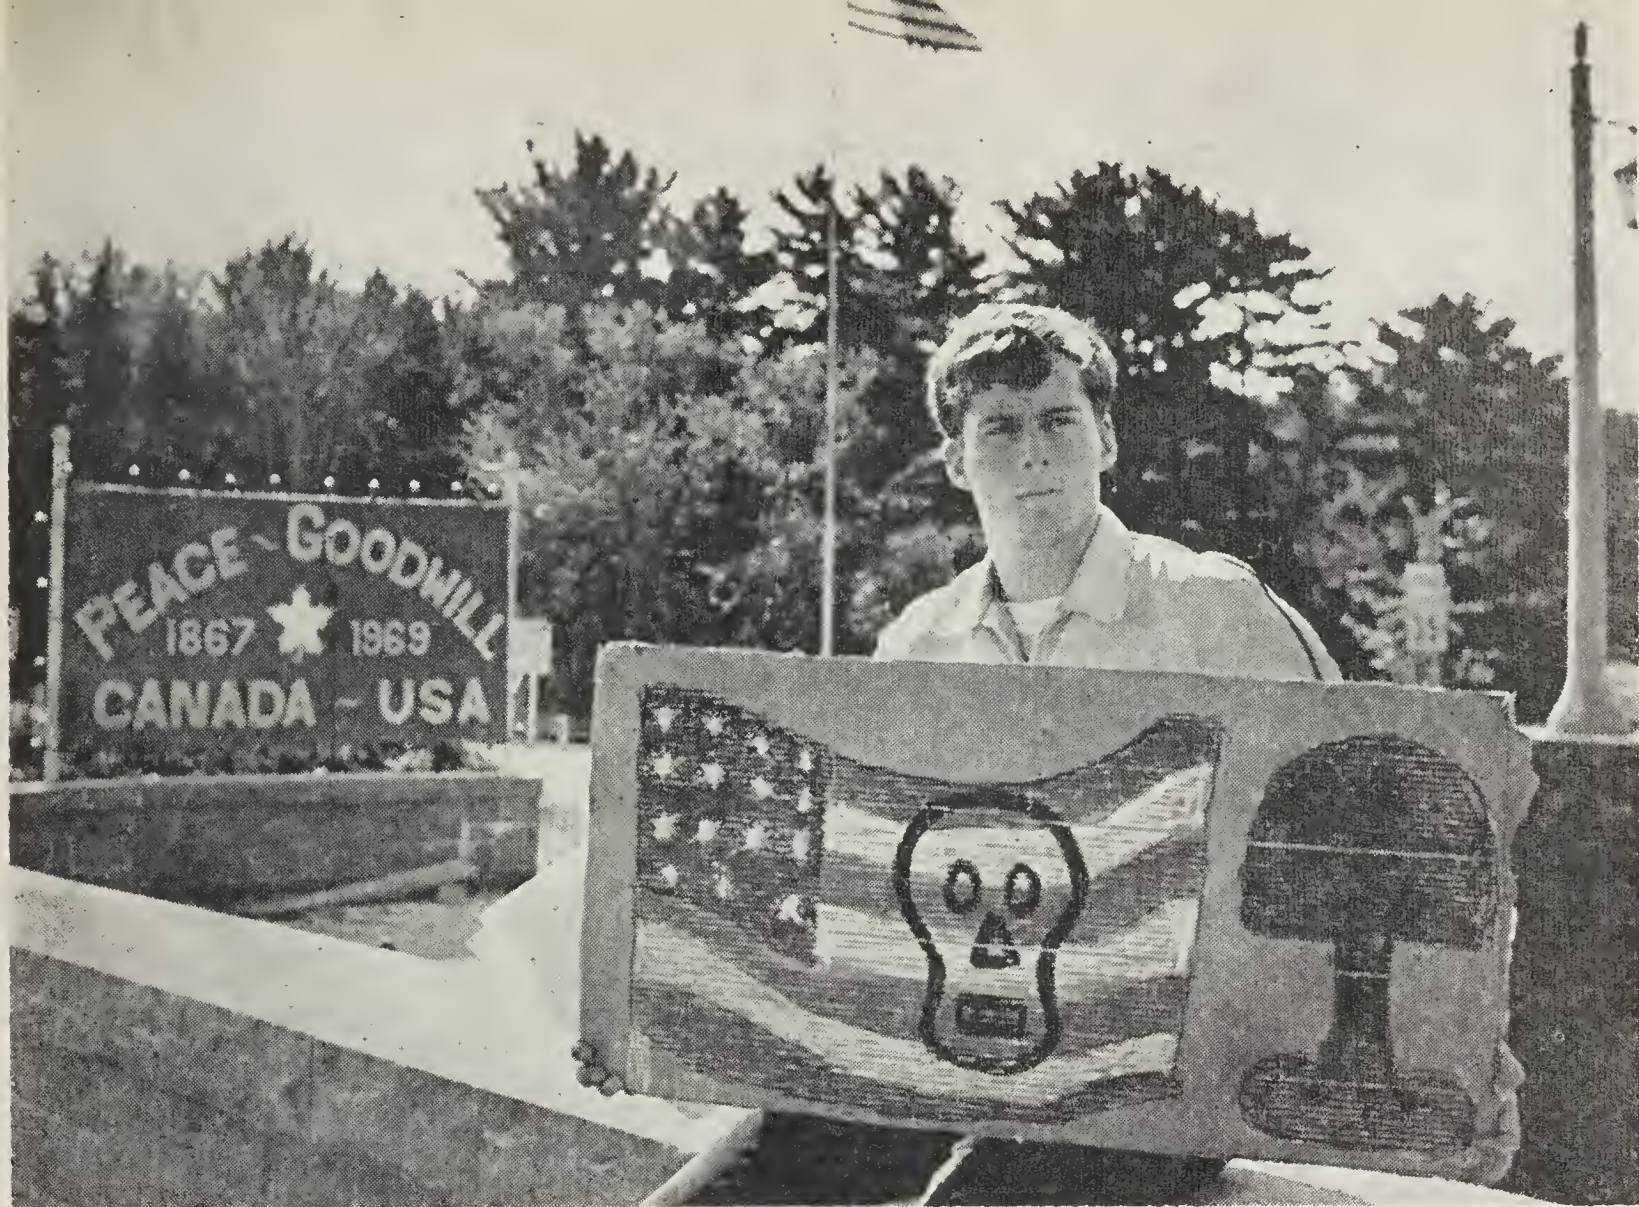

To Operate Medical Aid Centre

The Aesculapian Society has virtually completed plans to open a volunteer medical aid centre at 200 Montreal Street, on the north side of Kingston. The centre will administer free medical advice and care to the residents of the area, and will be completely independent of the University. The only subsidy obtained on campus was a $500 grant from the Alma Mater Society. Money for operating expenses has been promised from private sources.

To date more than 120 students, mostly Medical, and a number of general practitioners have agreed to donate a few hours a week to the clinic. The centre is to open in November on a three-evening and Saturday-morning basis.

Free Tuition

The Engineering Society from now on will pay the tuition fees of their President, which this year amount to $625. Previously the President had been provided with an apartment in Clark Hall, but this was sacrificed to provide additional office and interviewing space for the Housing and Placement Service.

An American nuclear test in the Aleutian Islands brought out students demonstrators across Canada who massed at United States border points to show their concern over the possible effects of the underground test. Seventy-five to one hundred students from Queen's and St. Lawrence College turned up at Ivy Lea and Wolfe Island as part of the protest. Above is Barry Anderson, a fourth-year engineering student, Montreal, at the International Bridge.

First Student Pub Opened in Union

The first student pub at Queen's was scheduled to open in mid-October in the newly renovated second-floor lounge of the Students' Memorial Union.

The pub will be restricted to students who are twenty-one years of age and older, their non-university guests (with identification), and members of Queen's staff. A survey conducted by the Alma Mater Society last year indicated that more than 50 per cent of the student body would be eligible to use the pub facilities.

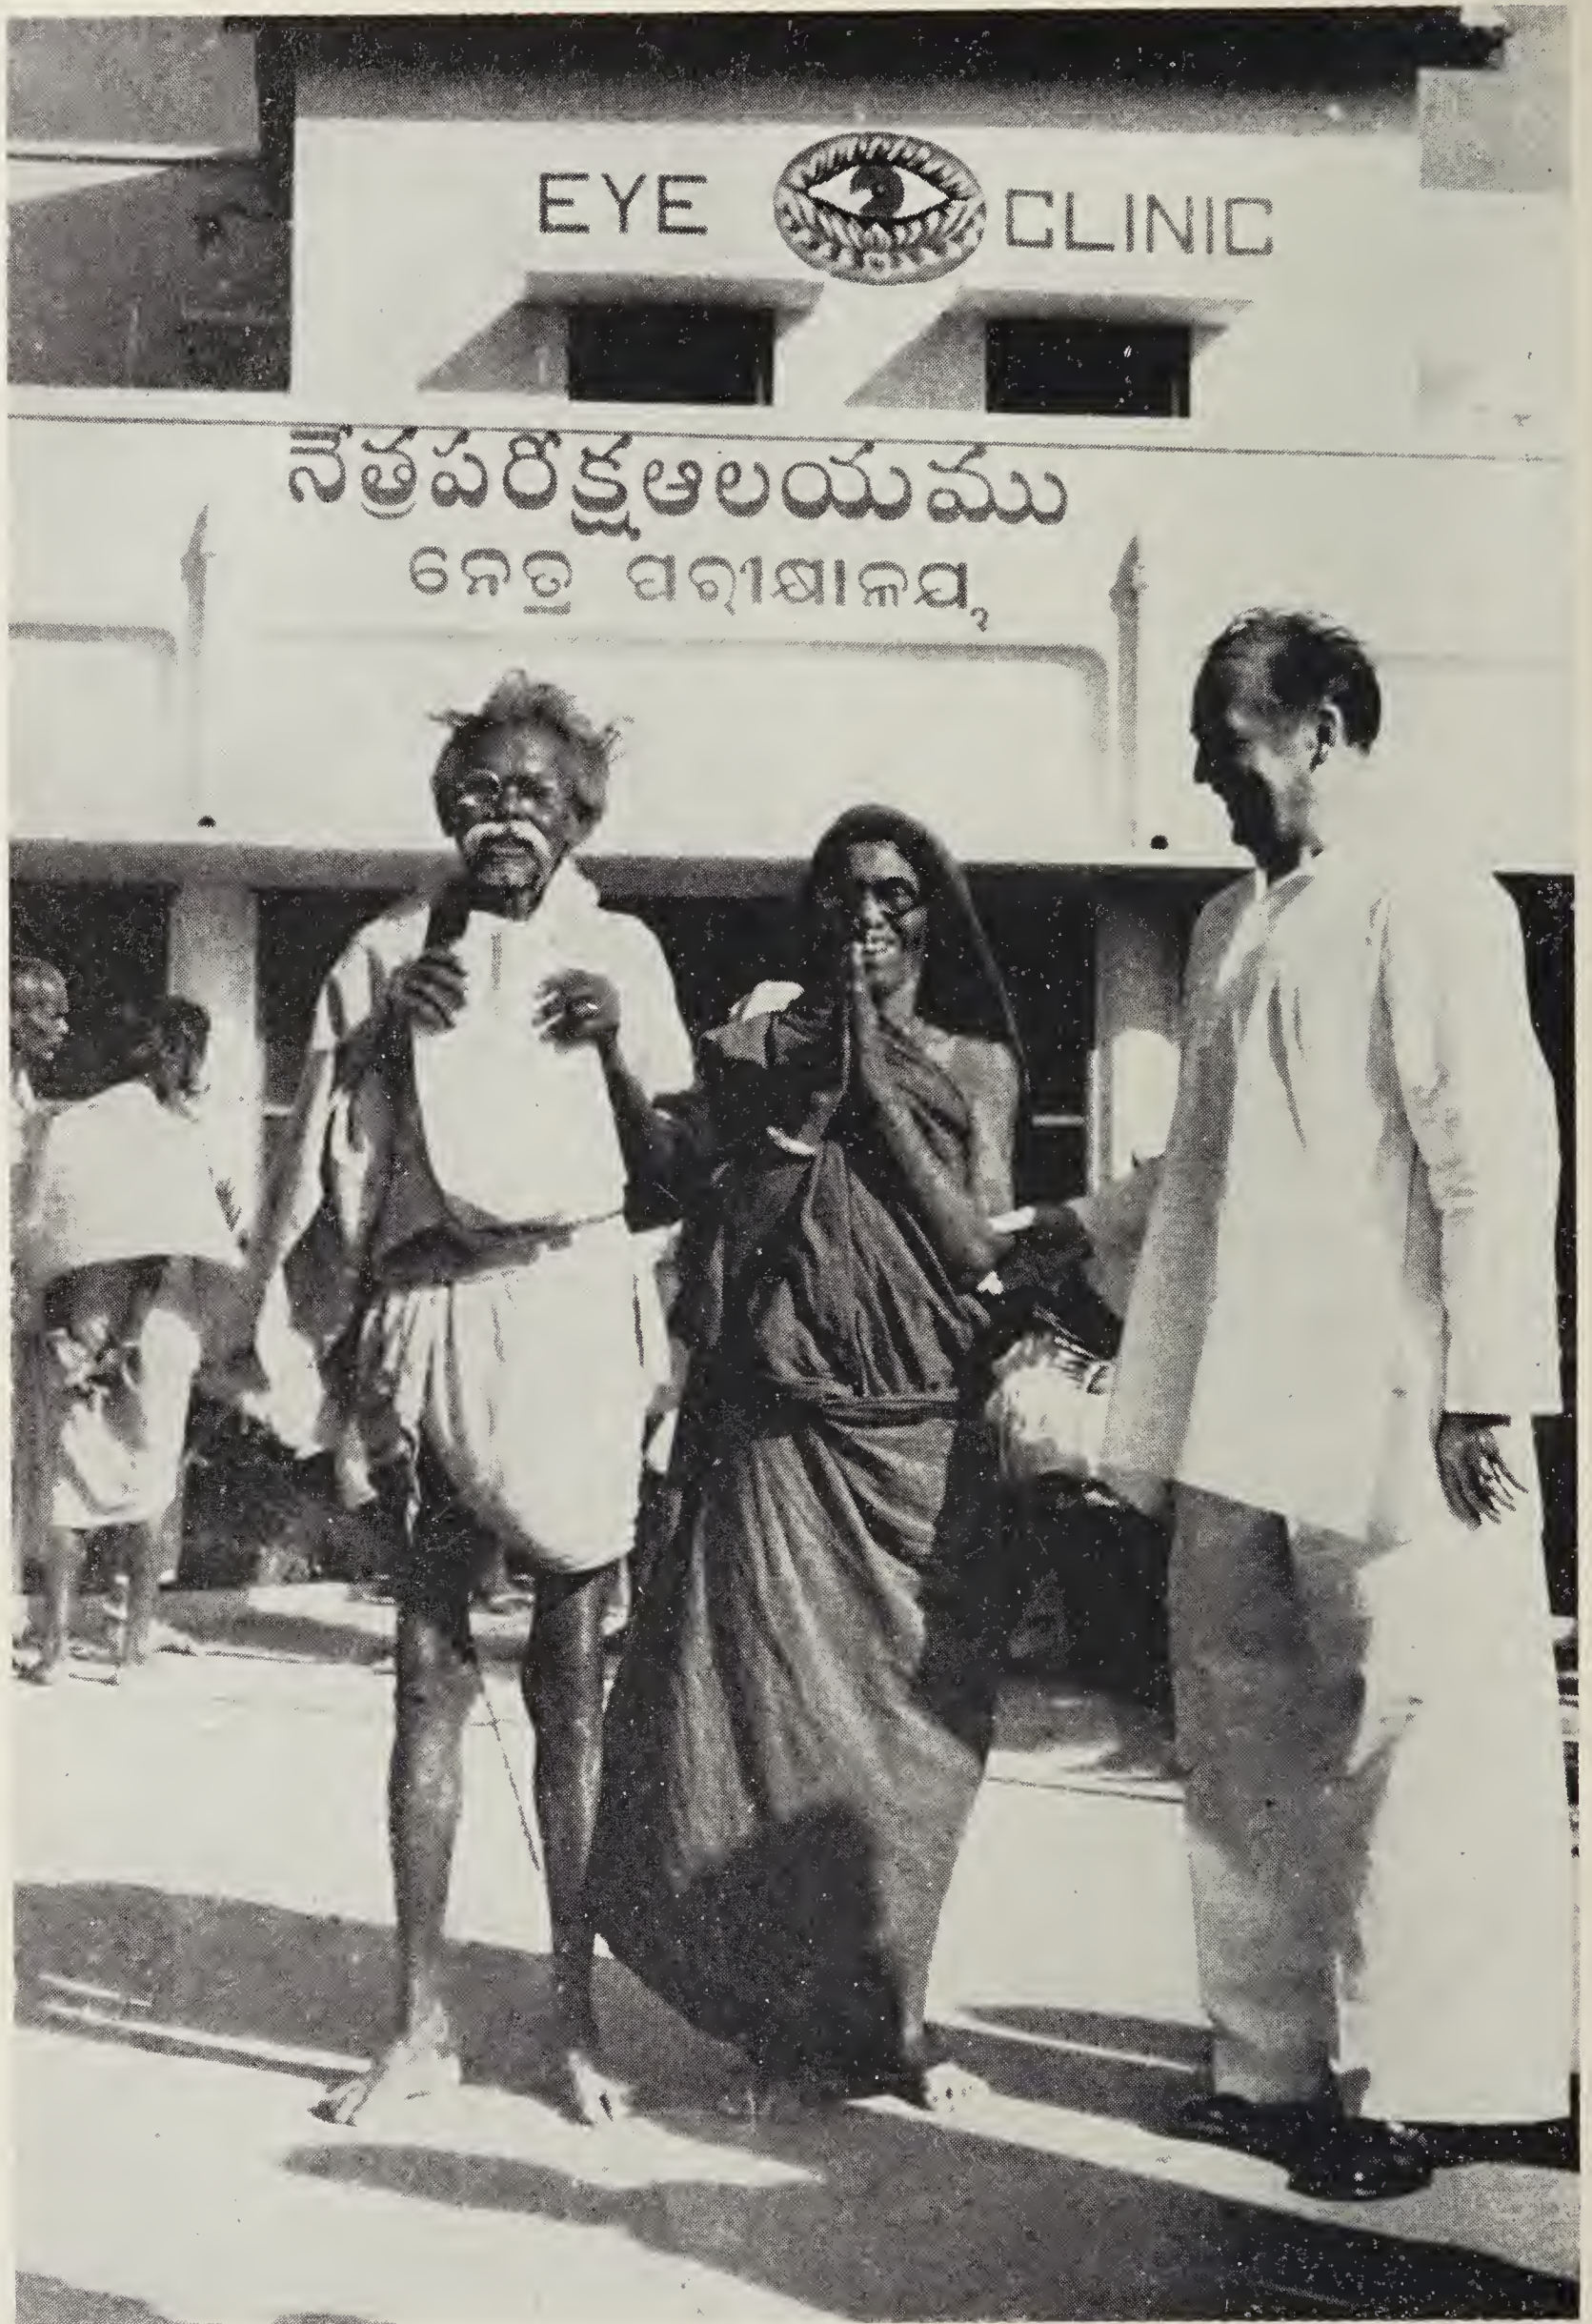

The pub will provide seating accommodation for 130 and initially will be open on Thursday and Friday evenings of each week. It will be operated by students, supervised by students, and policed by students.

Newspaper Expands

Golden Words, the four-year-old newspaper issued by the Engineering Society, has been expanded to a circulation of 6,000 and is now being printed bi-weekly. The new policy calls for a wider coverage of campus news and issues.

Awarded First Prize

In the recent Student Film Festival held at Sir George Williams University, the only Queen's entry in the competition was awarded first prize, scenario section. The entry was a 16 mm. sound film entitled "The Drink," created by Peter Duffy, a student in the Faculty of Medicine last year who is now an intern in a Montreal hospital.

Operation Eyesight

Dr. Ernest A. Johnson, Med. '38, of Calgary, Alta., performed 1,000 eye operations in what has been described as a "mini-blitz on blindness" in India last year.

Given a great ovation by colleagues recently at the 32nd annual meeting of the Canadian Ophthalmological Society, Dr. Johnson delivered a paper in which he told how he performed top-speed large-scale eye surgery at Sompeta, a village on the east coast of India.

More than 3,000,000 curable blind people live in India, he said, and an attempt to give more surgical eye service there was started by a group of Calgary citizens some years ago. It was known as "Operation Eyesight Universal."

The Mission Eye Hospital was opened with 125 beds last year, and patients inundated the hospital, so great was their need.

"We tended to operate on those down to only light perception in both eyes," said Dr. Johnson. If they could see their fingers, they were not included in the lucky ones.

As many as 80 eyes were operated on in one day. Both eyes in one person would be treated at the same time.

MRS. JOSEPH GRAY

Elizabeth Gray, wife of the late Dr. Joseph Gray, F.R.S., O.B.E., formerly Chown Research Professor of Physics at Queen's, died in London, England, on September 29.

... unselfishness was her one great characteristic. The other was gaiety.

She would do anything to help a friend, or one in need, and for a host of young servicemen training in Canada during the war she did the same. To both she brought that rare refreshing gift — a sense of fun.

Finally, far from home herself, and afflicted by deafness and blindness, she never for a minute allowed others to ponder on her predicament. But she wanted to know about their lives, about the world in general and particularly about the world in which she had lived — the world of knowledge and learning.

To the very end of her life, and at the very end of her life, those near her were quite unable to withhold their admiration for her courage and humour. They would, I am sure, feel that she deserved the words that Browning wrote in his "Epilogue to Asolando":

One who never turned his back but marched breast forward,

Never doubted clouds would break,

Never dreamed, though right were worsted,
wrong would triumph,

Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better,

Sleep to wake.

Gerald S. Graham

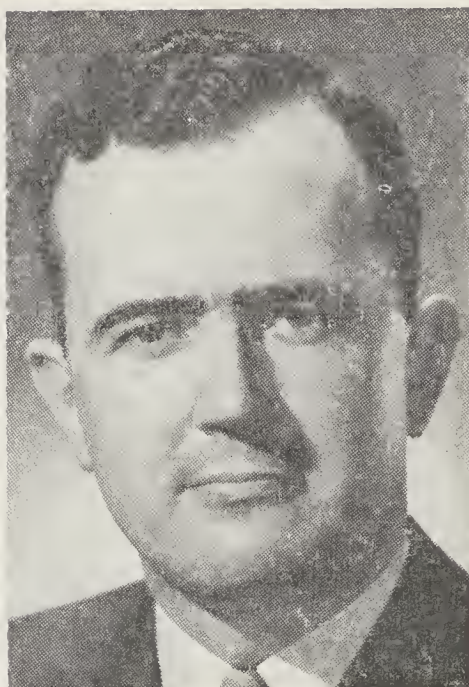

"A Concise History of Canada" is a condensed and colourful "reconstruction" rather than a "handy chronology of progress" by Gerald S. Graham, B.A. '24, M.A. '25 (Ph.D., Cambridge). The author freely admits that to attempt to invoke the realities of Canadian history within thirty thousand words is a hazardous undertaking, but he brings it off in a lucid, well-constructed narrative. Not the least of the attributes of this attractive volume is the inclusion of 181 illustrations, including portraits, cartoons, engravings, drawings, maps, sketches, and photographs. The book was published by Thames and Hudson of London, and was brought out in Canada by Thomas Nelson & Sons (Canada) Ltd.

Gerald S. Graham is Rhodes Professor of Imperial History at King's College, University of London. Previously he had taught at Harvard, Queen's University, and Birkbeck College, London. He has been a lecturer and visiting professor at various German universities in East and West Africa, the University of Wisconsin, and the University of Hong Kong. During World War Two he served with the R.C.N.V.R. with the rank of Instructor Lieutenant Commander.

Dr. Graham is the author of "Canada; a Short History," "Sea Power and British North America, 1783-1820," and "Empire of the North Atlantic," as well as numerous papers.

Lest We Forget

Dr. Norman Miller

"Lest We Forget" is a collection of nine pieces by Dr. Norman Miller, seven of which have appeared in the "Review" and all of which add up to an interesting presentation of prominent Queen's personalities and their contribution to the history of the University.

Included are biographical sketches of James Williamson, Nathan Fellowes Dupuis, John Matheson, Cuthbert Francis Gummer, John Ford Macdonald, and Murdoch Matheson. There is also a story of the Saturday Club, an address "And Gladly Teach," and a humorous sketch.

The publication marks four score years in the life of the author, a man who has left his own impression on Queen's. The price is $1.50 and copies may be obtained from the Alumni Office or the Tech Supplies.

MARTY MEMORIAL

VALUED AT $3,000

Established by the Queen's University Alumnae Association in memory of Dr. Aletta Marty

Any woman graduate of Queen's University with a Master's degree or equivalent may hold this scholarship, which is awarded annually for a year of study and research at the graduate school of a recognized university. Candidates must have the Master's degree when they hold the scholarship, but not necessarily when they apply for it.

A committee chosen by the Alumnae Association makes the award. The scholarship may be awarded to the same person for a second year.

Conditions

Application forms may be obtained from the Registrar, Queen's University at Kingston. They must be returned to the Registrar by 1, February, 1970, with the following information:

1. List of universities attended, with dates and degree or degrees received, together with a transcript of work done at universities other than Queen's. A statement of examinations passed at Queen's need not be sent.
2. List of foreign languages which the candidate can read and/or speak.
3. Information about service given as reader, tutor or demonstrator during university course.
4. (a) Statement of interest and activities other than academic and professional work.
(b) Statement of any business or professional positions held.
5. List of publications (if any).
6. Name of university at which candidate proposes to study.
7. Outline of proposed plan of study.
8. Statement of other scholarship applications, if any.
9. Names and addresses of three persons from whom confidential information may be obtained about academic and personal qualifications.

These persons must include two professors, one of whom is a professor under whom the candidate is presently studying or has recently studied. If the candidate has recently held employment related to her field of research, the third letter of reference should come from her employer. Otherwise she should ask a third professor, who can vouch for the quality of her scholarship, to send a letter on her behalf.

10. The acceptance of the scholarship obligates the scholar to devote herself to study and research during the term of the award. The successful candidate must send to the Chairman two reports, the first at the middle point of her year of study, and the second at the conclusion of the year.
11. The first instalment of the scholarship, normally $1,700, is payable at the beginning of the programme of study. The second instalment of $1,300 is paid on the receipt of the first report.

ONE ROSE ALONE

A dozen roses? No!
Oh no, —
They overwhelm;
One rose alone
Is all my heart can hold,
Savouring deeply —
Savouring —

Please, One Rose Alone, go to the door of the Queen's Review and tell the porter that you come in loving memory of Miss Jane Drummond, first matron of Queen's Women's Residences (54 William St. and Maplehurst, 174 Earl St.), a gentle courtly woman who with rare understanding brought one rose alone to a patient in Kingston General Hospital during the typhoid epidemic of 1903. W. Kennedy, C. U. Peeling. Inserts, left: William Dobson, right: R. S. Foley. This was a record attendance for a sixtieth anniversary.

They came by air, rail, car, and afoot, and come they did, by the hundreds, for the Reunion celebrations on the weekend of October 18. It was a record attendance, with upwards of 1,200 on hand for the festivities.

In the vanguard was a select group of eleven, members of Arts '09 and Science '09, to celebrate the sixtieth anniversary of their graduation from Queen's. This group included Chancellor J. B. Stirling which accounts for the phenomenon of the Chancellor's Weather, as it has come to be known — a sunny spell which started when the rain let up on Thursday and continued until it resumed on Monday.

Also well represented were the Classes of Arts, Science, and Medicine '19, with a total of thirty-eight. Dr. J. M. Hazlett, Med. '19, one of the all-time athletic greats at Queen's, kicked off at the football game, and had the satisfaction of seeing the Gaels down Varsity, a feat which was by no means routine in his day.

These classes were the guests of the Alumni Association at the football game and at the Reunion Dinner in Wallace Hall on Saturday night, where they were presented with mementoes of the memorable occasion. The Principal, Dr. J. J. Deutsch, brought greetings from the Uni-

Golden Gaels Dethroned

The defending national champions place second to McGill in Yates Cup competition, and nose out traditional rivals from University of Toronto

O.Q.A.A. STANDINGS

	W	L	For	Agst.	Pts.
McGill	6	1	190	50	12
Queen's	5	2	133	96	10
Toronto	4	3	155	126	8
Western	3	4	159	139	6
Waterloo	3	4	112	157	6
McMaster	0	7	63	244	0

The crystal-gazers called the Golden Gaels to repeat for league honours, with the other clubs in a dogfight for second place. Coach Frank Tindall wisely made no such claims to fame, but with uncanny precision picked McGill as the darkest and most menacing cloud on the horizon.

As a soothsayer the Kindly Old Coach proved remarkably prescient as McGill thumped the Gaels twice and won the Yates Cup, with only a one-point loss to Toronto to mar the record. The Gaels won all their other games to take second place.

The shape of things to come was unveiled when Queen's went down to a 28-6 defeat by McGill in the season's opener at Kingston. The Redmen dominated the play and whenever the Gaels threatened, infrequently, they blew their chances with penalties.

In the return game in Montreal, with the league leadership hanging on the outcome, the Gaels' hopes were blasted when the McGillians trompled them into the muddy turf 21-3. After the first quarter McGill took charge of the ball and the game.

There is a certain breed of Queen's fan who looks upon any football season as a success which contains a win over Varsity and this year there were two such victories to brighten the scene. In the game in Kingston, the Gaels ran up a 21-point first half and then hung on for dear life as the Torontos dominated the second half. The final score was 24-17. This game was played under sunny skies, one of the few such occasions in a rainy, miserable fall.

The game in Toronto was a thriller in which the the two teams slogged it out in the mud on relatively even terms. With only a few seconds left on the clock and with Varsity leading 14-10, quarterback Bill McNeill threw a perfect pass to Rick Van Buskirk in the end zone and the Gaels won 16-14.

The drive started on the Queen's 46 with three minutes left in the game. After nine plays the Gaels had moved the ball to the Toronto 19, setting the stage for the McNeill-Van Buskirk heroics.

Queen's played each of the other teams once and won all games. In London, the Gaels downed the stubborn Mustangs 17-6, clinching the game with a touchdown at the 12.30 mark in the fourth quarter. At Waterloo, Queen's routed the Warriors 28-0, and in Kingston defeated McMaster Marauders 39-10 with a second half explosion.

An inconsistent offence hampered the Gaels most of the season. In desperation Coach Frank Tindall improvised freely. One strange manoeuvre, a spectacular version of the Lonesome Polecat, called for the snap and quarterback to line up in splendid isolation while the remainder of the team huddled out in left field — this was a block-buster on paper, but didn't confuse the right people. Another, known to the cognoscenti as Alice's Restaurant — something for everybody — called for a lot of milling about on the part of the backfield.

But it was in individual efforts that Queen's produced some of the more interesting action. Keith (Skip) Eaman had another standout season and was the only unanimous choice for league all-star honours and was picked as All-Canadian. In the first game against McGill he made a 44-yard kick-off return; Waterloo: five punt returns for a total of 120 yards; Western: 89 yards in 16 carries, an average of 15 yards on punt returns, and a 75-yard quick kick; Toronto (1): 33 yards to one TD through the line and 50 yards around left end for another; Toronto (2): 21 carries for 91 yards and a TD; McMaster: a 118-yard kick-off return, a 25-yard scamper down the sidelines; a 35-yard forward pass reception, and a 20-yard run for a TD. Once he found a little running room, he proved as hard to bring down as a high-flying duck with blank shot. In two seasons he has scored 84 points, which places him, in his sophomore year, eighth on the all-time list.

Ron Clark also contributed his share of virtuosity until injuries forced him out. In London he made a 42-yard sprint down the sidelines that set up the winning touchdown, and against Toronto he ran 90 yards for a TD.

With only a few seconds left on the clock, Rick Van Buskirk caught Bill McNeill's end zone pass to give the Gaels a 16 - 14 win.

Queen's placed five players on the mythical all-star squad, as compared to nine by Toronto and eight by McGill. For Queen's, on offence: Skip Eaman, half; Rick Van Buskirk, tight end; Bob Climie, guard; defence: Jim Sherritt, end; Mike Lambros, half. The latter turned out to be quite a find for the Gaels. He came from Ottawa, after a year with the Duke University frosh, and proved to be a strong two-way player. Alert and agile, he made four pass interceptions, and he led the league in punting, with an average of 38.7 yards.

And so ends the saga of the sixties. It was a golden era for the Golden Gaels. They won the Yates Cup five times, and were runners-up the other five. In regular league games and playoffs the record was 52 wins and 16 losses, while pre-season it was 19 and 2. Congratulations to Head Football Coach Frank Tindall and his staff for a good job well done.

Around the Campus

Queen's joins WESTAR — Jeffery Hall opened — thirty-five recommendations affect Faculty of Arts and Science — Dr. D. M. Mathers heads Theological College — Alan Broadbent is student Rector at Queen's

Joins Telescope Project

Queen's is the first university in Eastern Canada to join WESTAR (Western Telescopes for Astronomical Research), a consortium of universities set up to complete a telescope project on Mount Kobau, in British Columbia.

The universities are: Queen's, British Columbia, University of Victoria, and three Alberta universities at Edmonton, Calgary, and Lethbridge. Others have the matter under consideration.

The project, which centres on a 157-inch telescope, was initiated by the federal government as the Queen Elizabeth II Telescope, but federal funds were withdrawn late in 1968. When several universities in the West showed an interest, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources agreed to turn over to them whatever facilities already existed, provided they form a legal entity, to receive them, and attempt to raise funds for their completion.

Fund raising and project planning are being carried out by a board of directors, two from each member university. Present chairman of WESTAR is Dr. Brian Wilson. Representing Queen's are Dr. A. T. Stewart, head of the Physics Department, and Dr. V. A. Hughes, head of the Department's Astronomy Group.

The general objectives of WESTAR are to advance the study of astronomy over the whole electromagnetic spectrum — radio, infrared, ultraviolet, and X-ray — and not be limited to optical bands.

The Mount Kobau installation cannot be completed until 1976 at the earliest, but this type of facility is a fifty-year proposition. There has not been a major project in this field since the David Dunlap Observatory was built in the 1920's. Since that time, such major discoveries as the shape of this galaxy, the expansion of the universe, and — more recently — quasars, pulsars, and the entire field of X-ray astronomy have occurred. Energy sources out in space, not yet understood, are likely to have a tremendous impact on the future, and an installation with the scope of the Mount Kobau telescope is considered crucial to continuing Canadian research in the field of astronomy.

Dr. R. A. Jeffery is shown speaking at the official opening of the new mathematics building which has been named in his honour. In the background are, left to right, Chancellor J. B. Stirling, Architect Tom Mill, Mayor Val Swain, Dr. J. J. Deutsch, Queen's Principal.

Facilities used by Queen's researchers and students at present include an optical observatory with a fifteen-inch reflecting telescope on campus, a radio observatory with antenna arrays and a steerable sixty-foot telescope at nearby Westbrook, the Canadian Alouette satellites, and the radio observatories at Algonquin Park (National Research Council), Penticton, B.C. (Dominion Radio Astrophysical Observatory) and Greenbank, West Virginia (National Radio Astronomy Observatory).

Jeffery Hall Opened

Jeffery Hall, the new $2,160,000 mathematics building, was officially opened on October 17, by Dr. Ralph L. Jeffery, a former head of the Mathematics Department. Dr. Jeffery came to Queen's in 1943 from Acadia University, and retired as Department head in 1960.

Dr. J. J. Deutsch, Principal, and Dr. J. A. Corry, former Principal, also took part in the ribbon-cutting ceremonies. The day-long opening ceremonies began with an address by Prof. Irving Kaplansky of the University of Chicago entitled "A Survey of Operator Algebras." Prof. Nathan Mendesohn of the University of Manitoba spoke on "Recent Progress in Combinatorial Structures," and Dr. A. J. Coleman, head of the Mathematics Department at Queen's, spoke on "Mathematics in the Second Half of the Twentieth Century." The building is located on University Avenue, beside the Agnes Etherington Art Centre and opposite Grant Hall. The structure was designed with two of its five storeys below ground level.

Grace Campbell

Rev. Harvey B. Campbell, Arts '16, has presented Queen's with the private library of his wife, the late Grace Grant Campbell, Arts '15, novelist and non-fiction writer. It was her express wish that this collection, concerned exclusively with Scotland and Scotsmen, should be given to Queen's. It contains some rare and valuable items, and is a welcome acquisition.

Annual Budget Is $25,426,000

Queen's is now in the world of large-scale finance, according to the first annual report of the University Senate's budget committee. The presentation was made by Dr. Donald Wood, director, Industrial Relation Centre.

The committee examines the main elements of the approved annual operating budget of the University rather than calculates the budget itself.

The 1960's have seen "spectacular growth in the size of the annual operating budget, which has increased from $5,180,000 in 1960-61 to $25,426,000 in 1969-70 — an increase for the period of 390.8 per cent." In comparison, the City of Kingston's budget this year was approximately $13.5 million.

De-Emphasis Recommended

De-emphasis on examinations and lectures, better teaching—especially of first-year students—and a new stress on informal learning experiences are among the thirty-five recommendations contained in a report submitted by a University committee on teaching and learning. The program is suggested only for the Faculty of Arts and Science, and will be given to appropriate faculty committees for their study.

The study was initiated by Dr. J. J. Deutsch, Principal, who established the committee shortly after he took over his post in the fall of 1968. It has held public hearings over the past year and last May took ninety students and members of staff to Lake Opinicon for a conference.

Suggestions include more resources and special courses for first-year students' needs. The committee notes that faculty teaching time per student increases disproportionately as a student gets more senior and specialized. Changes in instructional methods are most important for first-year students who must get an accurate impression of true university life. Wider use of small instruction groups, such as seminars and tutorials, is therefor recommended.

Continuous evaluation of students during the year, through instructional examinations, should replace year-end final exams where classes are small. Final exams lose value when they cannot be returned with criticism to the student and in some cases may not measure accurately a student's ability.

The report claims the examination system takes up one sixth of the university year, but with instructional exams this should be reduced to about a week. Supplemental exams would not be necessary if continuous evaluation were used.

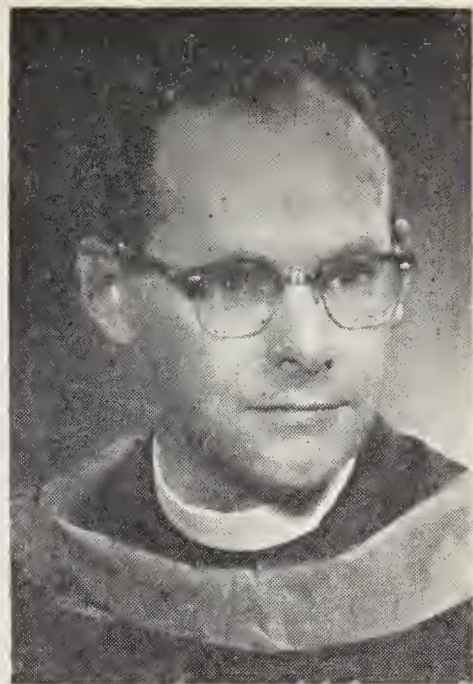

The committee recommends informal education be encouraged through student learning groups and proper design of residences in order to enhance an attitude of scholarship at the university.

The learning groups would be scheduled regularly, but would not be mandatory, and would aid the student in integration of information he is given from various courses and assist him in research, study, and writing problems.

Queen's has "an almost unique opportunity to develop a kind of total university environment," because so many of its students are from out of town and thus adhere closely to the campus, the report says. The size of Kingston allows professors to live close to the campus.

Residences should be designed to encourage intellectual and educational exchange and the students living in them should have a greater say in rules and procedures of operation. It is suggested that one or two residences could become co-educational and that students should have a hand in residence planning.

Further to improve teaching, faculty should hold seminars on problems and methods of teaching. Financial support for graduate students engaged in teaching undergraduates should be increased.

Dr. D. M. Mathers

Dr. Donald M. Mathers has been appointed Principal of the Queen's Theological College as of June 1, 1970. He succeeds Dr. Elias Andrews, Principal since 1955, who will continue as professor of New Testament Studies. Dr. Mathers came in 1953 as professor of Systematic Theology and Philosophy of Religion. He is associate professor, Department of Religion, in the Faculty of Arts and Science.

The majority of the committee recommends a standardization of the time spent in the bachelor, master and doctoral levels of study and that in the first three years no distinction be made between honours and general studies as is now done. Degrees should be granted promptly at the end of the third, fifth, and seventh years at which time the student will have either a general, professional, or advanced education.

It is conceded, however, that there may be an interim need for an honours degree at the end of year four for prospective teachers or graduates who want good standing to enter other universities.

The position is adopted that entrance to first year at Queen's should be subject to Ontario Grade 13 with minimum standing and course requirements, but university courses kept at high standards.

The report is also concerned with the selection of faculty and the maintenance of balance between their responsibilities—teaching, research, administration, and public service. Deans and departments should co-operate in selection.

The committee was composed of four students and four faculty, and a chairman, viz. G. A. Harrower, Vice-Principal (academic) and formerly Dean of Arts and Science.

WIN CHAMPIONSHIP

The Queen's Golden Gaels, soccer division, completed their most successful season with two championships, the Central-Canada and the Ontario-Quebec Athletic Association.

After winning their own league, the O.Q.A.A., the Gaels went into a three-team, round-robin event and came through with two straight wins. In the opener Queen's squeezed past Loyola 4-3, and then shut out Laurentian 4-0.

Scholarship Program Announced

An expenditure has been approved of $105,000 in each of the next two years for scholarships.

The money, from the University's Consolidated Awards Fund, will be used to finance five Kingston Scholarships, two scholarships for Frontenac County students, 10 Provincial Scholarships ($1,350 each), 10 Ontario Honour Matriculation Scholarships ($1,000 each), a maximum of 100 in 125th Anniversary Scholarships ($150-$500 each), four Faculty of Law entrance scholarships ($1,500 each), the St. Andrew's Exchange Scholarship ($2,000), and French and German Exchange Scholarships ($2,000 each, plus tuition).

Department of Art History Plans Summer School in Venice

The Department of Art History will hold a Summer School in Venice, from May 15 to June 30, 1970. The project is recognized by the University as part of the annual summer school arrangements, and students who attend may be awarded a credit under the General B.A. program.

The School will be led by Dr. George Knox, associate professor of Art History, and it is intended that the number of students should not exceed twenty-four. The course, requiring no requisite, will provide a general introduction to Venetian painting and architecture from c. 1500 to 1800, and it will take the form of morning seminars, occasional evening lectures, and daily study tours of churches, public buildings, and museums.

The fee is $100 and it is anticipated that the cost of accommodation and demi-pension (breakfast and one main meal per day) and excursions will be approximately $200. It is hoped that it may be possible to organize a charter flight from Montreal to Venice, leaving about May 15, and returning about July 10, at a cost of about $200 per head, but this depends upon 120 persons subscribing to the scheme, who would not, of course, be bound to attend the Summer School.

Alan Broadbent

Student Is Rector

● Alan Broadbent, a graduate of U.B.C., and a postgraduate student in Arts and Science, is the new Rector of the University. He became the first student Rector in history when he polled more votes than all the other six undergraduate candidates put together in a campus-wide election.

Mr. Broadbent is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Alan S. Broadbent of Vancouver, B.C. The father is permanent president of the Class of Arts '29, and also holds a B.Com. degree from Queen's. He was president of the Alma Mater Society, 1928-29.

Students forced the resignation of their last Rector, Senator M. Grattan O'Leary in December, 1968. He had held the position since November, 1967. The post lay vacant while the students considered whether the Rectorship was the sort of representation they wanted on the Board of Trustees.

LOAN APPROVED

The provincial government has approved a $4,015,890 loan to Ontario Student Housing Corporation for the construction of a 576-unit residence and social centre on the West Campus, one mile west of the main campus.

This amount covers the full cost of the building. The student housing corporation originally applied to the cabinet for 10 per cent of the cost and to Central Mortgage and Housing for the other 90 per cent, but C.H.M.C. had run out of money for the current year. O.H.S.C. then made application to the cabinet for the full amount because of the need for housing at Queen's.

STUDENTS VOLUNTEER

About 125 students worked as volunteers during the fall across the city, with another 100 in reserve. They were coordinated by the Student Volunteer Bureau, an organization which began this year and has placed free manpower in about ten institutions in the city.

The volunteers were elves, helpers, and clowns in the annual Santa Claus parade. They also worked in Kingston General Hospital, area prisons, north Kingston, drop-in centres, Kingston Day Care Centre, and the like. Students were available as consorts for children on Hallowe'en Eve.

OLD BOYS HOCKEY

The hockey Old Boys are scheduled to play the Gaels at the Constantine Rink at Royal Military College on February 21. In games played in 1968 and 1969 the Old Boys defeated the students.

Next year the new Jock Harty Arena will be available, as the entire physical education complex is expected to be finished by the summer of 1970. The steel is now erected and construction is proceeding rapidly in all departments.
